Missouri River Floods Iowa Town, Perils Nebraska

OMAHA, June 14.—(AP)—The flood-bent Missouri river, which has broken through eight levees to flood southwestern Iowa farm lands and threaten southeastern Nebraska, today inundated the south end of Hamburg, Ia., flooding scores of homes.

The Missouri river district engineers' office here said approximately 100 prisoners of war from the Clarinda, Ia., camp are aiding in the fight to hold upstream levees.

The situation at Hamburg can become much worse if the upstream levees and the secondary line of defense prepared during last April's flood in the same area cannot be held, engineers said. Further overalls, they fear, would flood more agricultural land upstream and let more water into Hamburg.

The Burlington railroad lost several hundred feet of main line north of Hamburg on which Omaha to Kansas City traffic moves. Grain elevators and the railroad station also are in the flooded area.
