in restoring it than they did at Naples, where their work of restoration was amazingly swift.

OUR Americans have been doing the spectacular job and apparently have been taking more than their normal share of the punishment, but we mustn't forget that at bloody Caen the British and Canadians have been HOLDING OFF the German armored strength that would have prevented us from cutting off Cherbourg if it could have got at us.

THE German rocket bombs are still falling in England by the hundreds, causing casualties and damage. The dispatches are cautious in referring to them, indicating rigid censorship. One returning officer, for example, is permitted to be quoted as saying that it is "quieter on the beachhead in France than in southern England"—which might be construed as describing either a quiet beachhead or a very UNquiet England.

The dispatches state flatly, however, that "in six days of INCESSANT bombardment with their new weapon the Germans have failed to halt the dispatch of a SINGLE ship to the French beaches."

A few of the oldsters will be able to recall the nervousness in this country during the last war when the Germans were bombarding Paris with their mysterious long-range gun, which made a good story but was a military flop. The Germans seem to love these spectacular stunts. Maybe this is another one.

THE Russians have taken Vit-puri and are pushing northward toward Helsinki. The Swedes said the Finns would quit if they lost Vit-puri—as they did in 1940. The Russians advanced in ten days through the two Mannerheim lines, which were the best that German military engineering could produce.

CHURCHILL, in a speech at the Mexican embassy in London LAST THURSDAY, made this statement: "The months of this summer may bring full success to the cause of freedom," which is an orator's way of saying we may lick the Germans by fall.

IN the Marianas, our American boys, after repelling Jap tank assaults, are halfway across Saipan (not over 7 or 8 miles wide) and approaching the island's most important airfield. On Biak island (far to the south, just off the New Guinea coast) we've advanced only 800 yards in 10 days. As we near the inner defenses of their home front door, the

THE SPIRIT WE NEED
 By Charles V. Stanton
 CHARLES "CHUCK" M. PLUMMER is only ten years old. Chuck is a News-Review carrier boy, and a good one. He receives very few "kicks" for missed papers and is very dependable. He also is patriotic. His income from carrying papers is not large, but every week he has been putting a major part of his money into war stamps. The Fifth War loan campaign has had him worried. He did not have enough stamps in his book to convert into a bond, but he wanted to help the drive along.
 Being a business man in his own right, he applied business methods to his problem and negotiated a loan from his father for the balance needed to complete the transaction, pledging a portion of his weekly income to retire the debt, and now Chuck's bond, and one bought by his sister, Janice, has been included in Douglas county's totals to date.
 Until the loan is repaid, Chuck won't have much money for shows and ice cream cones, but he says he'll get by all right. He has boosted Fifth War loan sales and has the satisfaction of having accomplished something for himself and for his country. He has several other bonds and is proud to be in partnership with the United States government.
 Chuck is only 10 years old, but if some of the people who are older and have bigger incomes would only be as patriotic and willing to cooperate in the current bond campaign, Douglas county would be much nearer the goal.

Mel Ingram, new athletic coach for the Roseburg high school, is planning to conduct a baseball school in Roseburg sometime this summer. Mel has taken over supervision of the summer recreation program, and is hard at work on a plan to be submitted for approval by the park commission. He contemplates activities for all age groups and, with proper cooperation, will be able, we believe, to perform a great service through supervised recreation, organized sports and social events.

The country is greatly perturbed because of increasing juvenile delinquency. One of the best remedies is to provide recreation facilities for boys and girls who otherwise would have nothing of interest with which to fill their idle hours.
 We are particularly interested personally in his plan for a baseball school.
 Softball is a fine game. We are not discrediting the advantages of softball simply because we personally prefer the good old American game of baseball. Softball can be played by active persons of almost any age. Little equipment is needed. The game can be exceedingly fast and strenuous or it can be played in a more leisurely fashion. But the crack of a bat against a hard ball, the fielding, throwing, base-running and strategy provide a sport that, in our opinion, is incomparable. Then, too, early training in the game by a boy possessing the necessary physical qualifications often leads to a professional career.
 Mel Ingram, who played professional ball with the Pittsburgh Pirates, has conducted baseball schools for the Cincinnati Reds. He has helped to uncover talent now in the big leagues. Perhaps his Roseburg school will lead to the development of another great name in baseball. But even if no player ever gets out of the sandlot classification, he will have received training in a game which requires real skill and sportsmanship.
 We hope the school will be a big success.

Seven Rescued On Rubber Raft Off Aleutian Islands

WITH NORTH PACIFIC FORCE, United States Fleet, June 20—(AP)—Seven young navy fliers, survivors of the first rubber raft rescue in the Aleutian area, thanked their lucky stars today and Herbert Rowe, of Clearfield, Utah, remarked: "We proved it could be done."
 He and his mates recalled that only two months ago another navy plane crew perished off Attu after waving off rescue planes which might also have foundered in the rough sea. The bodies of six, including Lieut. Newell Wyman, pilot, were recovered from two rafts by a destroyer three days later. They had died of exposure.
 The new raft experience, this time with a happy ending, was also off Attu and those saved were the crew of a Ventura bomber piloted by Lieut. (jg) Jackson W. Clark, Kingsville, Tex.
 Lieutenant Clark and Rowe, aviation ordnance man 3/c, both remembered that the water was "damned cold."
 The pilot explained that the plane, closed out from Attu by clouds, was unable to make an alternate base because of a gas shortage. There was nothing to do but come down on the sea after sending a radio appeal for aid.
 The plane sank 35 miles east of Attu, but only about two miles off the shore of Agattu.
 It went down about 50 seconds after hitting the water and the crew was able to release only one of two rubber rafts.
 "It was only meant for four and seven of us had to crawl on it," Robert J. Marker, machinist's mate 2-c, Denver, Colo., said. "We had a hell of a time."
 Marker got the raft out and pulled the release cords. It took about five minutes for him and the others to struggle into the tiny rubber boat. They managed only because the sea was calm. Then they started paddling toward Agattu. They kept it up for about 35 minutes until sighted by a Catalina rescue plane.
 About 10 minutes later a crash boat dispatched from Attu arrived and took the fliers off the overloaded raft.

Plan Offered to Break Deadlock on Price of Cotton

WASHINGTON, June 20—(AP)—Seeking to break a senate-house conference committee deadlock on the Bankhead cotton amendment to the price control extension bill, the administration today put forward a new compromise plan for adjustment of textile price ceilings.
 Its details were not divulged officially, but Senator Maloney (D-Conn.) said he thought it would be accepted by Senator Bankhead (D-Ala.) and other cotton states senators. Maloney made the comment after a conference with Bankhead.
 As a result of the compromise move, the conferees postponed until 2 p. m. a final meeting to attempt to crack the stalemate.
 The administration offer was reported to provide for a limited adjustment of some textile ceilings if raw cotton fails to go to parity, but to give administrative officials more leeway in making the adjustments. The original Bankhead plan called for tying textile ceilings to a parity price for raw cotton and also would have guaranteed millers their manufacturing costs plus a "reasonable profit."
 Japs are fighting grimly, with everything they have. They tried to make a beach landing in our REAR on Saipan (probably from a nearby island) but were stopped.
 Our warships have been bombarding Guam, south of Saipan. Bombardment by our warships is often a prelude to a landing.

Washington News From an Inside View
 Argument, Sentiment, Comment

By HARRIS ELLSWORTH
 Congressman, Fourth Oregon District
 WASHINGTON, D. C., June 17—This week the house finished its more than seven days of discussion of the price control bill (OPA). A few amendments were put in on the floor of the house, but most of those were rejected. The bill is now in conference.
 The conference committee made up of both senators and representatives will doubtless make a report early next week, and the bill will probably be passed and go to the president. There has been some rumor to the effect that the president might veto the bill because of some of the provisions. However, in view of the fact that no great sweeping changes were made, it seems to me he should find it acceptable.
 The debate on the bill represented an outpouring of the grievances of our 140,000,000 people against what has apparently been poor administration of a fairly good law. The recitation of the troubles followed a general pattern. Regulations forced manufacturers out of business with low price ceilings, but permitted new manufacturing in the same line to begin business and sell their products at much higher prices. This resulted in scarcity of goods and ultimately in much higher prices to the consumer for many items.
 One typical example was the pancake flour situation which developed about a year ago. Many producers of non-branded pancake flour packages were forced to quit business when denied a 7c increase in price from 6c to 7c per package. Thereupon, some new firms went into the business of producing pancake flour of the same kind and in the same size package, but they were permitted to sell at ceiling prices as high as 18c per package.
 Numerous small retail stores were forced out of business because the prices they were compelled to pay for merchandise were higher than their retail ceiling price line, but new stores appeared next door or across the street, selling similar merchandise at higher prices. The new stores, of course, were permitted ceiling prices in line with their current merchandise cost prices.

 In my own district, I have known several instances of tons of farm produce being left unharvested for the reason that OPA delayed too long in telling the processors what the ceiling price on the canned, bottled, or preserved product would be. Since the processors did not know what they could sell their pack for, they were afraid to buy the produce from the growers.
 These are but a few examples. Hundreds were recited on the floor.
 Out of sheer desperation, many members of congress sought to remedy administration abuses by attempting to write administrative detail into the law. The members proposed the hundred or more amendments because there seemed to be no other way of getting relief for the people. The original price control law gave the people no appeal from OPA to the courts. It was recognized, however, by a majority of the members of the house that it is impossible to write administrative detail into any statute. The best that could be done, therefore, in addition to throwing certain other safeguards around the administration of the law was to provide a system of appeal through the courts from OPA rulings.
 It is true that some minor groups sought the passage of amendments that would give their interests special advantage. The house was well aware of these moves, and all such amendments were killed. A few also sought to wreck the functioning of the law, but these attempts were also voted down by large majorities.

What happened during the past two years of administration of the price control law is very similar to the type of administration given other acts passed by congress. It happened that the OPA administration was more in the public eye and has received the most attention. However, similar administrative abuses of other laws are occurring. The Wagner labor relations act is a reasonable statute, but the administration of it has caused strikes, confusion and bad relations. There are numerous other minor examples. Since the courts as presently constituted generally uphold the administration, we are dangerously near, under this administration, a change in the form of our republic from a three-branch government, namely legislative, administrative and judicial, to a government of only two branches, namely administrative and legislative. Since the congress cannot write administrative detail into law, we are placed in a very difficult, not to say impossible, situation. As I see it, the only way of re-establishing the republic under the constitution is to go back to the three-branch system of government.
