

Reciprocal Aid From Britain to U. S. is Detailed

LONDON, June 21—(AP)—American and British reciprocal lend lease programs were the key factors which made possible the invasion, Capt. Oliver Lyttelton, British minister of war production, said yesterday in an address to the American Chamber of Commerce.

Referring to charges that the British are selling lend-lease goods to third countries, Lyttelton declared that every possible precaution is being taken to prevent anything of the kind happening.

He said that American lend-lease amounted to four billion dollars in 1943, and that British reverse lend-lease has amounted to two billion dollars to date. He said that America is supplying 25 per cent of England's munitions and that the four billion dollars was exclusive of supplies to other parts of the world for use by British forces.

British lend-lease to the United States is now running at more than twice the rate than at the beginning of 1943, he said.

American forces in the United Kingdom have received use of barracks, airports and other military facilities, and one-third of all their current requirements of military supplies, Lyttelton asserted. He said that British aid also consisted of the construction of 100 airbases, the turning over a large number of aircraft including 500 gliders and many squadrons of Spitfires and supplying American forces with one-fifth of their food.

An important phase of British aid to Americans, he said, was making available as troop transports the great liners Queen Elizabeth and Queen Mary.

Other Assistance Cited
Lyttelton said other items of British aid included the 90-gallon belly fuel tank that enabled Thunderbolts to escort bombers over Berlin and other long-distance targets; turning over to the U. S. navy results of British research in submarine detection and the turning over details of the Rolls Royce Merlin and White engines which are being made in the United States.

Family Groups Popular for Farm Harvest Work

Family-size groups of harvest workers, who drive their own cars out to the fields, are just about the most popular type of Oregon farm workers, according to reports farmers have made to the emergency farm labor office of the Oregon State college extension service.

Farmers like groups of one or two women and three or four youngsters because they can readily be used by small growers and they are easily shifted from one harvest job to another, according to Mrs. Mabel Mack, assistant state farm labor supervisor in charge of the women's land army. Moreover, the women provide adult leadership to the groups and assist the growers in other ways.

More of such family groups will be necessary this year to harvest Oregon's crops, Mrs. Mack says. Cherries and cane fruits will call for hundreds of pickers in the immediate future, and additional thousands will be needed later in the summer and fall for beans, hops and other late fruits and vegetables.

A cooperative arrangement between the OPA and the O. S. C. extension service through its county farm labor assistants will provide necessary gasoline for essential farm workers driving their own cars.

Those wishing to register for farm work may sign up with their county farm labor employment office.

Warning Given On Coulee Land Buying

Advised that an aged couple recently had been induced to purchase land in the Columbia basin reclamation project in eastern Washington on false pretenses, Frank A. Banks, regional director of reclamation, at Coulee Dam, Wash., has warned local people to obtain all the facts about the proposed development before buying.

"Anyone approached to purchase land in the project, to be irrigated by the Grand Coulee dam, should write to the Bureau at Coulee Dam, Wash., to learn whether the land is actually in the project area, whether it has been classified as land that will be irrigated, and what the government considers its true worth to be," Mr. Banks said. "There is no charge for this information."

The persons who were bilked by an unscrupulous land salesman—their names were not made known—reported they were told the land they purchased would be irrigated immediately after the war, when, as a matter of fact, it may be a long time before water can be made available for it.

Mr. Banks said that while reports of misrepresentation in the sale of basin lands are few, the bureau of reclamation is anxious to nip speculation attempts in the bud.

Baby Chick Association To Meet at OSC June 30

A thorough discussion of the proposed hatchery shutdown, and the general feed and egg situation will be featured at the annual meeting of the Oregon Baby Chick association, to be held at Oregon State college June 30, says Noel L. Bennion, extension poultryman.

Dr. E. E. Boyd, president of the International Baby Chick association, will attend the meeting and address the group. Mrs. H. A. Watzig, Roseburg, president of the association, has announced a program that will include talks by H. E. Cosby, head of the O. S. C. poultry department; P. A. Gent, Eugene; William J. Chase, Aurora; Fred Cokell and Ambrose Brownell, Milwaukie; G. C. Keeney, Portland, and Lloyd A. Lee, Salem.

Reporting fifth war loan bond sales of $21,481,000 or 17.3 per cent of the Oregon quota, E. C. Sammons, state campaign chairman, urged solicitors today to complete assignments promptly.
