Imported supplies would be used to meet unexpected wartime emergencies and to add to year-to-year reserves. The Agriculture department said in a report today, that imports are expected to continue, although on a reduced scale, to provide additional supplies, either for unexpected disappearance or addition to the carryover reserve. Officials expect use of wheat for livestock feed to decline considerably during the coming feeding season, since livestock numbers, particularly hogs and poultry, will be smaller, and new crop prospects appear favorable.
