POLITICS AT CANYONVILLE

By Charles V. Stantos

THE day of the big fire at Canyonville, we were talking to Bill Willis, the town's mayor. Bill had been out in the hayfield when he received word of the blaze, and he rushed in to help control the conflagration.

The mayor gave us some interesting statistics, but, being engaged in rounding up fire news, we failed to make notes at the time and have failed to remember all the details. The gist of the matter was, however, that the municipality of Canyonville went heavily into debt a few years ago to install a city-owned water system. In the space of a comparatively few years, the citizens of Canyonville have retired the major portion of their bonds, have placed operating expenses on a cash basis and have only about $1,500 outstanding indebtedness.

That is a mighty fine record, and we can understand why Mayor Bill's voice was filled with pride as he told us what 36 Oozes had been accomplished.

We can talk all we please about national politics and fundamentals of government, here in these United States, it 44 Transpose (abbr.) nternational affairs, but when we get down to the real is the towns like Canyonville, and Myrtle Creek, and Sutherlin, and Roseburg, and the thousands upon thousands of other small, organized towns and villages where we find democracy in its purest form. It is upon such a rock foundation that our political structure is based. The roof may leak, and there may be some dry rot at the top, but the foundation is secure.

While Bill Willis was telling us about his town's fine record, he was busily wiping his brow to remove the sweat that had accumulated while he joined with his fellow Navy Reshuffle townsmen in combatting the blaze. He was dressed in faded overalls and a shirt begrimed with dust from the Does Not Impair hayfield and soot from the fire. There was nothing to distinguish him from many other men of the crowd. He wore Powers of Tojo no frock coat nor tall hat. He held no badge of office. Yet Mayor Bill and his fellow officers of the city of Canyonville, like small-town officials, county courts and other officers of municipal, district and county administrative bodies everywhere represent, in our opinion, the backbone of the
