Watch Labor Need When Buying Farm, Says OSC Leader

Judging a prospective farm on the basis of the amount of labor it will use profitably through the year is suggested by E. L. Potter, head of the division of agricultural economics at Oregon State college, in a new extension bulletin entitled "Buying a Farm in Western Oregon."

"In ordinary times, if the members of the family are fully employed and if they use proper methods and modern machinery, the farm should furnish an adequate living," Professor Potter points out. "If it does not, that type of farming should be abandoned and the sooner the better. The farm that does not furnish full employment cannot be expected to afford a full living. Instances to the contrary are very rare."

Jobs Exchange Advisable The author adds that every farm cannot conform to this ideal of the family-size farm because families themselves vary in size and working capacity from year to year. If a community is largely composed of farms of this general nature, however, there can be an exchange of work that will keep all rather fully employed.

If the majority of farms in the community are less than family size, on the other hand, there will be chronic unemployment as far as those farms are concerned, he says.

The bulletin includes a table from a previous study made in Oregon by the farm management department on average acreage in crops, and average labor requirements of various types of western Oregon farms. It shows, for example, that average number of acres in crops ranged from 47.3 for 40 berry and truck farms, to 181.6 for 26 general crop farms.

The average acreage in crops of 16 part-time farms was 27.6.

This extension bulletin, No. 635, also cautions against underestimating the investment necessary, which ranged from just over $10,000 to slightly above $20,000 for the actual farms studied.

Circulation Of Library Increases

Circulation of the Roseburg Public Library during its fiscal year ended June 30 last totaled 28,051 book loans, an increase of 1977 over the previous year, according to the annual report of the librarian, Mrs. Hilda Reizenstein. At the end of the same period the library's list of borrowers totaled 3,124, as against 3,051 at the start of the year.

Registered library patrons outside of the city, paying an annual fee of $2 each for the book borrowing privileges numbered 64. The fee is required as a contribution to the library's maintenance because the city receives no county funds for the institution's upkeep.

During the last fiscal year 342 books were added to the library's shelves, bringing the grand total on hand to 14,727, largest number ever available to its patrons.

NEWS OF OUR MEN—WOMEN IN UNIFORM

Private Etta Murphy, an Air Wacs, has been assigned to Hammer field, a Fourth air force unit, located near Fresno, Calif. Private Murphy is a daughter of Mrs. Maud McDonald, Sutherlin.

She enlisted in the Wacs last April. Two brothers, W. G. Murphy and H. L. Murphy, are serving in the navy and coast guard, respectively.

Robert D. Trued, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. Clarence Trued, Idlewild route, Roseburg, was graduated recently from basic flight training at Marana army air field, Tucson, Ariz. Prior to entering service, Cadet Trued was employed by the Independent Pneumatic Tool Co., Los Angeles.

Sgt. Lowell M. Cyrus and Sgt. Clinton L. Fogel, both of Roseburg, are among casualties from the Normandy invasion to reach Baxter General hospital, Spokane, Wash., where they are being treated for wounds received in action. Fogel was wounded in the hands by bullets from a machine gun while capturing a German pillbox, after his unit had penetrated 20 miles beyond the main supporting force. Sgt. Cyrus was a radio operator on a plane which carried a load of paratroopers to France just ahead of H-hour on D-day. The following day he was hit in the leg by flak when his plane returned with supplies.

Proud Prussian Caste Humbled by Hitler's Purge

By WADNER WERNER LONDON, Aug. 7 (AP)—The ruthless purge of the German army ordered by Adolf Hitler looks from here like "the stab in the back" that Nazi propagandists have been talking about for the past 20 years.

The German armies at the front apparently are being knifed from the rear and the hand that holds the dagger is Hitler's.

What Hitler and his propagandists called the "dagger thrust of 1918" was the peace signed by civilians. The Nazis asserted that the first World War was not lost on the battlefield but on the home front.

This time the whole military hierarchy from Field Marshals down to lieutenants faces an iron purge that already has cost the lives of eight high officers since July 20 and threatens the liquidation of thousands in coming weeks.

23 Officers Implicated Twelve officers have been marked for early trial as "traitors" by the dread people's court. Berlin broadcasts named a total of 23 officers as implicated in a revolt against Hitler. The Berlin announcements also listed two officers as "deserters" to the Russians. One was identified as a major, Gen. Lindemann, apparently the commander of the 361st German infantry division who was reported by Moscow to have been captured by the Russians on July 23 and not the commander of German battle troops as first reported. The other was identified as a Maj. Kuhn of the general staff.

The setting up of a "court of honor" to execute the purge and trials by the people's court are described here as dragging into the dust all the traditions of the proud Prussian military caste and the deepest humiliation yet sustained by the German army.

Hitler's action in the very midst of his most critical situation on the three land fronts of Europe in effect gives weary commanders the hard choice between surrendering or running the risk of having to prove their innocence in Gestapo Chief Heinrich Himmler's death-dealing star chamber.
