Cruel Joke Sends Man's Parents on Useless Trip

PORTLAND, Oct. 30 (AP) — Mr. and Mrs. Dayton Pleson were en route home to California today, half-relieved and half-interrupted at an anonymous person with a perverted sense of humor. The couple received a telegram announcing their son, Iverson, had been fatally injured by an electric saw. They rushed here to attend the funeral. Result: No such accident had occurred; the company where the son was supposed to be working does not exist; the person who signed the telegram does not exist; and the original copy of the telegram was written in a round, juvenile-looking hand.

Quick-Thinking Boy, 8, Saves Six During Fire

CHICAGO, Oct. 30 (AP) — Eight-year-old Vance Notum's father is in the army but he proved a worthy "man of the house" yesterday when a fire started spontaneously in his home. His quick thinking was credited with saving the lives of six persons. When smoke curling from under a closed door awakened Vance, he acted quickly. He carried his two younger brothers, 5 and 2, downstairs, called the fire department, awakened his mother and three women roomers. Women who quickly extin-

"I'VE GOT TO HAVE IT!..."

In the midst of their busy wartime job, railroad people are often called upon to do things not generally considered "in the line of duty." For example, there was the case of the mother whom we shall call Mrs. Parker.

Mrs. Parker was standing in the Third & Townsend Station in San Francisco that morning, waiting to board the streamlined Daylight for Los Angeles. She had a small baby in her arms and she was obviously worried about something.

As train time approached, she grew frantic. Looking wildly about her, she saw a man in a gray uniform and rushed up to him.

"I've got to have my suitcase!" she cried. "I can't go to Los Angeles without it."

The man in gray—the stationmaster—tried to soothe her. "Where did you leave your suitcase?" he asked. "Maybe we can help you find it."

"I didn't leave it anywhere. My husband was supposed to bring it down to the station and the train's about to leave and he hasn't shown up."

"Well, that is a problem," said the stationmaster. "But maybe it isn't too serious. Lots of people travel to Los Angeles on the Daylight without luggage. It's a day train, you know."

"But you don't understand," pleaded the mother. Then she paused. "You look like a married man," she said, and leaned over to whisper something in his ear.

"Oh, I see!" The stationmaster smiled. "You go ahead and get on the train, and I'll see if we can't help you out. Be sure to tell the conductor about it and give him your name and seat number. I'll do the rest."

When the Daylight stopped at Salinas, a breathless man got aboard and handed a package to the conductor. "Here they are," he said, "and it wasn't easy. Next time they'll probably ask me to dig up a pair of nylon stockings!"

The conductor took the package to Mrs. Parker. "Here are the diapers," he said. "The stationmaster wired our man in Salinas and he got them here just in time."

Mrs. Parker and the baby couldn't say a word.

This story doesn't have anything to do with our part in the war effort. It just shows that railroads are more than trains and tracks. Railroads are people. And no matter how busy railroad people are, they still have time to be thoughtful, and understanding, and helpful.
