On the combined fronts of the British Second and American First and Ninth armies the Germans continued fierce resistance. The first army troops penetrated some distance inside the important city of Eschweiler, six miles north-east of Aachen, in house-to-house fighting. The British northeast of captured Gellenkirchen, 12 miles north of Aachen, slowly were eliminating Germans fighting in Siegfried line pill boxes.

A front dispatch said the Ninth army rolled to within 25 miles of the Rhine and about a mile from the Roer river, after enveloping nine towns in 24 hours.

British Nearing Ruhr

Polish troops in Italy recaptured Monte Fortino, overlooking a wide stretch of flat ground leading to Faenza, junction point five miles northwest on the Rimini-Bologna highway. The Germans had driven the Poles from the position several days ago. On the right, British troops took Castiglione, 2½ miles from the highway.
