To save yourself disappointment—

PLEASE DON'T PLAN A HOLIDAY TRIP

on Southern Pacific

If you are a civilian planning a holiday trip on Southern Pacific this year, we hope you will give up your plans and thus save yourself from disappointment.

Here are the facts:

Already, Southern Pacific's volume of passenger traffic is about five times greater than in 1940, a fairly normal year, yet practically no new passenger cars could be built since Pearl Harbor. Too, we must move increasing thousands of service men as the war against Japan mounts in intensity. And we must be ready at all times to transport the wounded arriving from the Pacific.

In addition, thousands of service men and women will be going home over the holidays to visit their families. For many of them, it will be the last chance to go home for a long time. We intend to take care of them.

We can't add to the number of seats and berths on our trains, so it is clear that civilians planning holiday trips on Southern Pacific will be disappointed.

Naturally we don't enjoy publishing this warning. Ordinarily we'd be very happy if you "tried the train" on your holiday trip. Maybe next Christmas there'll be room for everybody on our trains. We profoundly hope so. But first things come first until this war is over.
