Glass Produced When Power Line Drops Into Sand

REEDSPORT—A new but somewhat expensive method of manufacturing glass was discovered here recently, when the high tension transmission line of the Central Lincoln PUD ground between Lincoln, Tankentich and Florence. After the break had been located, repair crews observed that the ground where the broken ends of the line had been dropped was warm and smoking and that tufts of grass had been burned away. Making further investigation it was found that the roots of the beach grass had been fused with hot sand and swelled to twice their actual size. After the mass had cooled the roots were dug out and were found to have been transformed at the core to almost pure glass. One root of this character was more than nine feet long and from one-half inch to more than two inches in thickness. Some offshoot roots, from one to three inches in length, were found clinging to the main stem.

Norman B. Hess, pharmacist's mate, first class, husband of Mrs. Meryl Hess of Roseburg, has recently been awarded the Bronze Star Medal for "meritorious service while attached to the medical section of a marine defense battalion according to announcement made by the Navy Dept. His citation reads as follows: "For meritorious service while attached to the medical section of a marine defense battalion during the invasion and the establishment of a beachhead on enemy Japanese-held Bougainville, Solomon Islands in November, 1943. Preceded only by the assault troops, Hess landed with his unit on the island on November 1 and for the next ten days worked diligently under constant enemy bombing and sniping attacks, helping in the preparation of the first surgical operations. His outstanding skill and untiring efforts contributed materially to the efficient functioning of the medical section in the treatment and evacuation of the wounded and his unswerving devotion to duty in the face of grave peril was in keeping with the highest traditions of the United States naval service."

Morse Denies Reported Attack on OPA Action

PORTLAND, Feb. 5.—(AP)—An Oregon Merchants association official today had a telegram from Senator Wayne Morse denying published reports that he had attacked the OPA for prosecuting grocers who violated the December 26 ration order. J. M. Lamsinger, secretary-treasurer of the association, made public a wire from Morse protesting that he had referred to "an entirely different subject."

Morse said his January 26 telegram concerned a complaint that the OPA was penalizing merchants who "unavoidably and unintentionally" violated regulations, but that he had "no information concerning charges against retailers with reference to ration stamps."

DIAL-LOG

By Susan Ease your feet in to slippers, throw another log on the fire and plan a nice quiet evening with the Lono Ranger. Here Comes the Band, Michael Shane and Sherlock Holmes. You might even call it "Take It Easy Time" except that you have to take that at 8:30 in the morning on Monday, Wednesday and Friday. We're mighty happy to have two such bright spots on the morning programs on T. I. Ed. There are the new "More of the first named, you might be interested to know that Frank Novak, the orchestra leader plays a total of over forty instruments—a one man band, in a manner of speaking. We'd like to mention again that Rex Miller, news commentator, is being heard Mondays through Fridays, at 4:15 in the afternoon. We haven't paid a great deal of attention to him, since that is usually a busy time around the office, until we noted B. Mike's comment, and, may we say in passing, when he hands out a bouquet it must be deserved. However Mike says, and we quote, "Miller sounds adult."

THANKS TO FOUR BRAVE MEN

By Charles V. Stanton

There are four men in Oregon for whom we have no spirit of envy. They are the men who, by request of legislative committees, attempted to compose the differences between commercial and sports fishermen and brought out a very complete and thorough report designed to promote conservation on all coastal streams, establish new methods of enforcement, and remove some of the more flagrant evils existing in the handling of our fisheries.

It is an excellent report, and was conceived and executed only after the most exhaustive studies. The four members of this sub-committee, all of them busy men, worked long hours. We attended one of their meetings which was unbroken from 4 to 9 p. m. Time was taken out for a meal and the hearing was continued until after midnight, whereupon the committee went back into session until 2:30 a. m. That, we were told, was one of the shortest meetings.

The men are Chris Kowitz, president of the Isaak Walton League; Bill Smith, past president of the Oregon Wild Life Federation; Charles Henne, commercial fisherman on the Alsea and international representative of the fishermen's union, and Bill Puustinen, of the Columbia River Fishermen's union.

These four men will really take a beating. Their report and recommendations will be satisfactory to no one. The commercial fishermen will violently attack the provisions removing fixed gear and set nets, while demanding longer rather than shortened season. Sports fishermen, on the other hand, will insist that the report favors the commercial interests; that its conservation proposals are unsatisfactory, and that it would accomplish nothing. Possibly the most positive proof of the report's integrity will be found in the avalanche of abuse and criticism that will descend upon the creators from both sides of the controversial issue.

We doubt if the committee's recommendations withstand the impact of prejudice, pressure and politics. In fact, we doubt if any solution, based on an attempt to compromise differences, ever will prove satisfactory.

It is our opinion—an opinion for which we have been roundly criticized in the past and probably will be assailed in the future—that this constantly recurring fish controversy can never be settled until we determine which rivers and areas are best suited for commercial fishing and separate these entirely from zones to be made principally recreational. The interests of commercial and sports fishermen are too diametrically opposed ever to be permanently composed by compromise.

We must, we believe, set aside certain streams, which, in our opinion would include nearly all our coastal rivers, excepting the Columbia, for recreational purposes, on the theory that they would thus benefit the most people and contain the greatest revenue potentialities, leaving the Columbia river, certain bays, notably Tillamook, and offshore fisheries primarily to commercial interests.

The recommendations of the four-man sub-committee would, if adopted, undoubtedly be a long step towards conservation, but the conflict between commercial and sports interests would continue unabated, neither side feeling it had been fairly treated.

Few people realize the courage it took for the four authors of that report to sign their respective names on the dotted lines, knowing as they did so that they would be incurring wrath from friends and enemies alike; that vested interests and organized groups would be in violent opposition. So here, for one, is a vote of thanks to four swell fellows who are to be commended for their sincere work on behalf of Oregon fisheries.

Whereupon we resolve to start listening to him—and suggest you try a portion of the same. This reminds us that Lester Smith, is taking over Cedric Foster's broadcast for this week and as you know, Fulton Lewis Jr. is in France. Remember too, tomorrow morning is the time for the Paula Stone and Phil Brito show and also for Jane Cowd and Organ Chimes and they're all good listening spots so be sure to keep tuned to 1490.
