loose a wall of water whenever they wanted to, and then close them and let another flood accumulate to be released at the critical moment.

With the dams blasted, there can be no further accumulation and when the present flood subsides it will be safe for us to attack across the valley. This situation is nowhere stated flatly in the dispatches, but it is intimated strongly.

THE Russians are apparently still held up at the Oder due east of Berlin. The natural wishful thought is that they are waiting to bring up reinforcements sufficient to do the job in a big way.

Waiting to see what happens along that line will be better than jumping to conclusions.

RUMORS of food and fuel shortages in Germany are rising. They are very, very interesting if true. German morale — for whatever reason — has been strong.

So far the Germans have been pretty well fed and have kept reasonably warm. Keeping up morale when you are fed and warm is one thing. Maintaining a stiff upper lip when you are cold and hungry is quite another.

Many a man has been able to keep on top of his troubles all day but has gone to pieces on coming home at night to a cold house and no dinner.

ABOVE all else, keep your eye on the fact that in both the west and the east we are killing Germans. After all, that is the thing that will end the war.

It is a brutal thought, but it is true.

WE bomb Jap airplane factories with another huge fleet of Superforts. Keep your fingers crossed. Remember Stimson's warning the other day that as yet we haven't fundamentally weakened Japan's war industry.

War plants can go underground. But ships and railroad trains and trucks can't. No nation can go on fighting efficiently unless it can move troops and supplies from place to place.

When we destroy Jap communications, we hit where it hurts.

PLANES of all sorts, from B-29s down to little fighters, both British and American, pound Rangoon. Rangoon is the communications nerve center of the Jap war effort in Burma.

Watch it.

WE'RE still mopping up in Manila. It will be a slow job, not finished in a day. When it comes to selling his life in a corner, when all hope is gone, the Jap is tops in the world.

In Manila and the Philippines generally the little yellow men are fighting for time—time to build defenses in China.

It will take more than time to win the war for the Jap. He needs better leadership than he has yet shown. Mere willingness to die isn't enough.

RESTRICTING FISHERMEN

By Charles V. Stanton

WE have been feeding our readers a rather steady diet of fish recently, but, as we are entering the Lenten season, maybe we're not too far out of line. We are heart and soul in the effort now in progress in the Oregon State Legislature to bring about greater conservation of fish life on the coastal streams of Oregon and the one reason we write so much about this subject is because we have this matter so much in mind.

We further admit we are thinking very selfishly, for we believe that if the Umpqua river can be restored as a recreational stream it will produce thousands of dollars in income from tourist and local sports fishing for every dollar now resulting from commercial fisheries, and we expect to garner some of those dollars for our own business. But in helping ourselves we also help others, for we sincerely believe the greatest benefit to the most people, who, after all, are the owners of the fish in our streams, can be achieved through recreational rather than commercial fishing. Yet, it is our opinion the fishing industry itself will be improved in the long run, for an abundance of fish in our coastal streams means greater eventual returns for those engaged in offshore fishing.

But in talking to commercial fishermen, particularly those on the lower Umpqua, we find that their one argument is that they already are over regulated. The commercial fishermen, they complain, have been restricted year after year while no restrictions are placed on sports fishermen.

The first fallacy of their argument is found in the fact that, despite regulations and restrictions, the fish runs in our coastal streams are declining at an alarming rate. Consequently restrictions have still fallen short of their objective and thus are inadequate. But it is entirely untrue that the sports fishermen have escaped curtailments.

The time is beyond our recollection, but older persons have told us of the days when the sports fishermen's bag limit was not restricted. Those were days when, as they recall, they travelled horseback or in buggies or wagons to fishing spots and came back with hundreds of fish.

Later the bag limit was cut to 60 fish in one day. Coming down to more recent years, and limitations with which we are familiar, the daily catch was 30 fish. That in turn was cut to 20. Now it is down to 15.

Sports fishermen have offered little resistance to steadily reduced bag limits and have even joined with the Game Commission at times in proposing these reductions as a conservation measure.

On the Umpqua river the sports fishermen promoted the existing law prohibiting use of boats upstream from the power dam at Winchester. This action was taken because certain members of their own fraternity were damaging the river by use of spinners cast from drifting boats.

The sports fishermen offered no objection when all tributaries on the upper river were closed. In fact, the action met with general approval.

But to say that recreational fishing has not been curtailed in proportion to commercial fishing is untrue.

Sports fishermen have, for the most part, encouraged conservation measures. Commercial fisherman, on the other hand, have most strenuously resisted every change made in the laws in the interest of conservation. Through their industry and unions they have maintained expensive lobbies at each session of the legislature. They have spent thousands of dollars in entertaining senators and representatives. Many of our legislators at last Christmas time received cases of choice canned salmon—point free—as gifts.

When the last legislature passed the steelhead bill, a proposal which would have been a decided forward step in conservation, the industry obtained a referendum and spent around $40,000, employing the services of a large advertising firm to paint a picture of the sports fisherman as a Jap lover sticking a knife into the back of the American soldier. The sportsmen were accused of trying to take food away from our soldiers, although the steelhead take is less than one-tenth of the total food fish from coastal streams and the catch in 1943, according to fish commission records, was only one-third of the poundage in 1930, showing that the action of the legislature in passing the steelhead bill was fully justified and that the people of the state were deliberately misled by false propaganda when they defeated the measure by a small margin.

In view of the general decline of fish population in all our coastal streams, we contend the argument that commercial fishermen already are over-regulated cannot be supported, nor can it be shown that sports fishermen have not been restricted in equal or greater proportion.

DIAL-LOG

By SUSAN

Well—at last—we've been talking and talking about the party we were going to have some day, but we've finally set a definite date and we're asking all of our friends in Douglas county to drop in and inspect the new studio next Saturday between the hours of 4 and 7 in the evening. We picked on Saturday because we thought it would be more convenient for a lot of our friends and neighbors who live out of town, so, here's a most cordial invitation to each and every one of you to come in and say "hello". After all, if it weren't for all of you we wouldn't be living in such luxury and we'd like to say "thank you". We'd like to meet many of you who we know mostly through your kind letters, and we'd like to greet old friends, too; so, do come in and see us on next Saturday. The whole staff will be on hand, with great big grins, to show you around.

We're having special doings for the sponsors on Friday night, that is we're asking the sponsors to come on Friday instead of Saturday, because they are all business men and Saturday is their busiest day. We hope we'll have lots of fun both Friday and Saturday, and we will, of course, if you'll just come along. We're mighty proud of our new home and we want you to have a chance to inspect it thoroughly, too.

In the matter of programs . . . we're so busy planning our Open House that the matter of programming sort of slipped our mind . . . we recommend Music You Remember, 6:30; Ships of War, 7:30 (story of the French invasion); Date with Annaloris, 8:15, and Mysterious Traveler at 8:30. And don't forget . . . we'll be seeing you next Saturday.

Idaho Basketball Team Defeats Huskies, 39-34

MOSCOW, Idaho, Feb. 13—(AP)—University of Washington cagers, defending titlists in the northern division, fell before Idaho 39-34 last night, bringing to seven their number of losses on the road this season in as many starts.

The Huskies have one more chance to win an away-from-home contest when they meet the Vandals again tonight.

The game made no difference in the division standings, Idaho retaining the cellar position behind Washington in fourth place.

Ross vs. Rattan On Wrestling Bill For Next Saturday

Tony Ross and "Silent" Rattan, two professional wrestlers defeated on Don Owen's weekly mat show at the Armory Saturday night, will be matched against each other this week, the grappling promoter announced here today.

Performing before a large gathering of excited fans last week, Ross was defeated when Referee Elton Owen disqualified him for rough tactics. The former middleweight boxing champion protested and said he could have won the match "in a walk" if the referee had allowed him to wrestle in his accustomed style—which includes considerable fisticuffs.

Rattan, the deaf and dumb grappler from Oklahoma, had a bad break when he suffered a deep gash over his eye when head-butted by the "Grey Mask", the villainous mystery mat man. Rattan had taken the first fall and was well on his way to victory when the Mask butted him and cut his eye, requiring him to forfeit the match. Four stitches were required to close the cut, but the injury is expected to be healed enough to allow Rattan to vie against Ross.

Owen said he would sign two other outstanding wrestlers to appear in the other feature match which will be announced tomorrow.

Russians Pleased With Program Of Big 3 Conference

MOSCOW, Feb. 13.—(AP)—Announcement of momentous decisions reached by the "Big Three" were given added significance for the Russian people today with the presence of U. S. Secretary of State Stettinius in Moscow on a brief oficial visit.

Fresh from the historic conference in the Crimea, Stettinius stepped off a plane at the Moscow airport yesterday as the capital still buzzed with news of the doings of Premier Stalin, President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill.

In one of the first editorial comments in the soviet press on the conference, the communist party organ Pravda declared: "The Crimean conference has proven that the alliance of the three big powers possesses not only a historical yesterday, a victorious today, but also a great tomorrow. The conference will go down in history as an example of real democratic cooperation."

The decision on reparations was pleasing to the average Russian. The announcement that "Germany will be obliged to make compensation for damage in kind to the greatest extent possible" is cheering news to people who have seen their cities wrecked, homes smashed, families liquidated and children and women tortured along with their soldiers.
