ROSEBURG NEWS-REVIEW
Roseburg, Oregon

Dear Mr. Knapp:

We thought you would like to know that The Oregonian, through TIME and other national magazines, is continuing to tell America about Oregon. People like you and communities like yours have made Oregon what it is today. Because there is a bond of common understanding throughout this whole area, because our communities pull together for the good of all, because there is such an outstanding story to tell about Oregon, we have felt inspired to put forth our best effort as a voice for this great region.

Since your community is planning for expansion after the war, you will be interested in the theme of our latest advertisement, reproduced here.

Sincerely yours,

Palmer Hoyt.

... proud of its War Record
looks with confidence to the future

OREGON is looking ahead confidently—and with sound reason: the Oregon market is one hundred thousand richly endowed square miles populated with a million-and-a-third ambitious people. It is not a one-city, one-industry, one-resource, war-born market.

Our shipyards have repeatedly set world records—for speed in shipbuilding, for lowest over-all costs, for fewest man-hours per ship. The thousands of newcomers who have helped us to set these records are the finest type of citizens an industrially growing area could ask for and 25% are skilled workers. Many have already invested in Oregon homes and farms.

With the war-born combination of management, competent labor, established plants and unlimited electric power, Oregon yards will be robust competitors under peacetime conditions in shipbuilding and other lines. Our lusty lumber industry (1/5 of all the standing timber in U.S.) needs no reconversion, and the day after victory will be booming with peacetime production.

The harnessing of the Columbia River gave us the greatest hydro-electric potential in the nation. Using that power, new industry grew rapidly... utilizing our natural resources of fish, minerals and wood. These industries were built and planned for expansion.

Diversified farming is a two-hundred million, year-round industry in Oregon. Food processing, the perfect economy linking factory and farm, is showing remarkable expansion.

Oregon is growing solidly and rapidly—because Oregon wants to grow, has the room in which to grow—and has the basic resources with which to grow.
