tillery and contributing directly to the defeat that finished him off for good.

WE get only sketchy outlines of the Battle of Arnhem, for again, as in France, we are moving so swiftly and decisively that we can't afford to tell the Germans, whose planes have almost vanished from the skies, what we are doing.

OUR eyes are naturally fixed on northern Germany and the road to Berlin, but we mustn't forget Patton and his spectacular 3rd army.

Patton and his redoubtable 3rd are shrouded in almost complete mystery by our side, but the Germans report that he is approaching WURTZBURG. Wurtzburg lies at the junction of the two MAIN railroads that lead south-eastward to Munich and Vienna.

It's a wild and crazy idea, of course, but these nazis are wild and crazy—so much so that anything might be expected of them.

BEYOND Vienna, in northwest ern Hungary, the Russians have exploded into a violent offensive up the Danube that has carried them to within 20 miles of the Austrian border and only 69 miles from Vienna itself.

IF it can carry on through Vienna and thence on up the Danube to a junction with Patton, Germany will be cut into three slices which we will be able to deal with more or less at our leisure.

THERE were wild rumors of a German surrender.

Eisenhower tells us from Paris that he believes there will be no negotiated unconditional surrender, but rather an IMPOSED unconditional surrender when the allies in the west link up with the Russians in the east.

That sounds more probable—although, of course, anything might happen.

THE Japs continue to insist that we are landing in the Ryukyus, on Okinawa, the largest and most important of these islands.

There is probably something to the story. The Ryukyus are obviously our next step. If not now, we must invade them later.

A. C. MARSTERS—THE BUILDER

By Charles V. Stanton

Historians referring to early-day pioneers have used the phrase, "Builders of the West," so frequently that it has become trite, but we believe no description more aptly fits the life and activities of one of Roseburg's First Citizens, Alva Marsters, who has been called by death.

Alva Marsters was born with a spirit of discontent in his blood. His disquietude stemmed from broad vision, intense patriotism, love of nature and humanity, and consuming pride in his community and state. His burning ambition for public improvement was never quenched. At an age when most men would feel they had earned the right to rest from successful labor, Alva Marsters, though suffering the frailties of advancing age, never ceased aggressive leadership.

Alva Marsters piled success upon success; but achievement of one goal gave him no excuse for rest, for constantly stretched before him were other objectives which must be attained. And, so, until encroaching death forced cessation of his labors, he fought on, earnestly, vigorously to make the world a better place in which to live.

More years ago than we like to recall, we sang with a high school male quartette. Alva Marsters, who was in the midst of a fight to convince the state of Oregon it should have a paved Pacific highway, conceived the idea that our quartette would help him in his campaign.

More than a half-century ago, Alva Marsters began urging construction of a road up the North Umpqua, connecting with Eastern Oregon. Today that road is in existence and, most appropriately, he has been a member of the board of trustees which controlled county financial participation.

For approximately 15 years, Alva Marsters headed the Oregon state fair board. Under his leadership the annual state fair grew into an event attracting national attention while proving of utmost importance to the agricultural industry.

In business life Alva Marsters was a banker. From the standpoint of men who make and enforce banking rules and regulations, Alva Marsters was not a good banker. If a merchant, a farmer or a common laborer needed a loan and if, in Marsters' opinion, he was the type of character who was a good risk, he secured financial help.

DIAL-LOG

SS 2
Just a word of caution, good listeners: don't anticipate an earthquake or a bombing when you hear those explosive noises on Lowell Thomas' program.

Dr. C. A. Edwards, whose Angeline Hour you heard for several years on Sunday afternoons, will be heard at 10:30 tomorrow morning with a special Good Friday presentation called "The Cross".

The little yellow men are still advancing in central China.

TOKYO radio (heard in London) offers a pipe dream to the effect that there is a growing feeling that the present war will last 20 years and may even carry over into the next century.

This is a part of the standard, blow-in-the-bottle Jap strategy to convince us that killing 100,000,000 Japs will be such a vast and awful job that it will be better for us to give them a "decent" peace and be done with it.

C. General Hines answers the charges in an interview. It's on tonight at 6:30.
New schedule effective tonight for Music You Remember with Esther Geddes. Thursday nights hereafter you'll hear it 15 minutes earlier, at 6:15, but Tuesday's broadcasts will remain at 6:30.

After tonight's recital of the air takes a Tuesday night spot, starting next Tuesday, at 8:30 p. m. Ships of War, another fairly new one, moves up to 8:45 p. m., starting next Tuesday night.

The Male Quartet will follow Lowell Thomas at 7:30 p. m. Tuesdays and Thursdays, starting next Tuesday, April 3.

Reason for all these changes is that the network is starting a new commercial show on Thursday nights, from 6:30 to 7, called the Treasure Hour of Song. Such folks as Lucia Albanese and Francesca Valentin are featured.

Red Cross Fund In Douglas County Still Increasing

Outside communities are showing excellent response to the appeal of the American Red Cross in its annual war fund campaign, Tommy Atkins, chairman, announced today. The chairman is urging all soliciting groups to complete their canvases immediately in an effort to complete the drive.

Community leaders are asked to complete their reports not later than Monday, April 2. Reporting on work of some community chairmen, Mr. Atkins said that Mr. and Mrs. Eldon Fisher at Kellogg have turned in $745, representing contributions by approximately 30 families.

Large Attendance at Easter Ball in Prospect
