In the Day's News

homeland — where, in an area roughly one and a half times Oregon's some 70 million people live.

We mustn't be too sure of that. The Jap can live on unbelievably little.

OUR roaming bombers are concentrating on Jap oil and Jap ships. It is announced today that 90 per cent of Formosa's alcohol production has been destroyed. Each day sees the destruction of more Jap oil refineries.

IN Japan's principal industrial cities, we have now burned and bombed out 117 square miles — roughly HALF of it in Tokyo alone.

Imagine an area ten miles long by six miles wide burned and blown out of the heart of San Francisco. But even that doesn't tell the whole story. San Francisco is a shipping, rather than an industrial city. Tokyo is heavily industrial, as well as shipping.

If you are familiar with Philadelphia, which is both shipping and industrial, try to visualize 60 square miles laid waste in the heart of it. That will give you some idea of what is happening —although you must still remember that Japan is only about one and a half times the land area of Oregon, with crowded cities BUNCHED TOGETHER.

AND don't forget that our campaign of destruction of the Jap war industry from the air is only BEGINNING.

WITH our American habit of jumping to conclusions (especially HOPEFUL ones) we're apt to think that it's all over but the shouting already.

That ISN'T true. The Japs are a persistent people. They are the world's best burrowers. They're getting underground as fast as they can. Even with all their cities smashed they will be able to produce a lot of war material.

But they haven't the ghost of a chance to win. All they are doing is inviting national extinction.

PLANES from Okinawa and the Philippines are OVERLAPPING at Shanghai.

Incidentally the Japs are reported today to have closed ALL German firms in Shanghai and to have interned 1700 Germans. The little yellow men have no further use for a LOSER.

As an interesting sidelight in the news, they have ordered all non-essential Jap civilians out of Singapore. They're evidently looking for trouble in that quarter.

SOONG of China reached Moscow on Saturday and had a talk with Stalin the same night. Moscow dispatches (passed by the Russian censorship) report "well informed" Chinese in Soong's party as saying that the talk "was most gratifying."

Remember that Soong represents the CHUNGKING, not the communist, Chinese. It looks as if a solution of the Chinese communist problem is being attempted.

SENATOR BUSHFIELD, of South Dakota, points out six ways in which the San Francisco charter limits the sovereignty of the United States He is doubtless right on all six points.

But the Constitution of the United States, when framed in 1787, limited sharply the sovereignty of the 13 states, which were aware of that fact and were WORRIED BY IT.

But the Constitution WORKED. If Americans then hadn't been willing to TRY it we couldn't have learned that it would work.

ATROCITY PHOTOGRAPHS

By Charles V. Stanton

We recently saw some pictures which make a person's blood run cold. They were pictures taken in a German internment camp. They were not the type of pictures made by professional news photographers. We have seen many pictures of atrocities in our papers and magazines—pictures of corpses covering the ground or piled on gondolas; pictures of starvation victims, etc., but there are certain limits to the type of picture which can be printed in a newspaper without stepping outside the bounds of public taste. But the pictures we saw had no such limitations. They were not taken for any purpose of publication. They were, rather candid, unretouched and pictorial evidence of German atrocities.

These pictures were taken by a couple of G. I. Joes. They went out at daylight to make snapshots at the prison camp they had captured the night before. Some of the pictures were foggy (for which we were grateful). They were strictly amateurish from a photographic standpoint. But they portray far more definitely than do the more limited news photos the crime against humanity perpetrated by the German people.

There can be no question of their authenticity. No one can claim that they are "propaganda" pictures, for they were made by two enlisted men who had no propaganda purposes to serve.

One of the men who photographed the scene was Hugo Fredrickson of Roseburg, a son of Mrs. C. E. Fredrickson. Prior to entering military service he had worked at various times for the News-Review as an asistant to his brother, Walter Fredrickson, News-Review pressman and foreman, to whom the pictures were sent. Hugo was with the First army.

Doubtless there are still some people in this country who favor an easy peace for Germany. We believe a good type of treatment for these people would be to take some of these photographs, showing evidence of extreme German brutality, blow them up to suitable size, and then force the easy peace proponents to look at them once a day for a week.

Following the last war, some of the atrocity propaganda was proven false and because of that fact many people doubted the truth of internment camp tales from this war. Photographs, some contended, could be posed without much difficulty. But there is no getting around a set of amateur photographs taken early in the morning by a couple of curious and desperately angry G. I.'s at a camp captured the preceding night.

Our high command made sure that evidence of German guilt could not be denied this time, as was done following the last war. They called delegations from Congress and from Parliament to view the horrors of the internment camps. They summoned representatives of the press to Europe for the same purpose. Best of all, they made German citizens view the camps with their gas chambers, incinerators, torture cells and piles of emaciated cadavers. Whole populations of adjacent German cities were made to view these evidences of nazi crime and provide decent burial for the victims.

It is hard at times to realize the extent of uninhibited human brutality. Our minds strive to rationalize the evidence of such inhumanity. But Germany's crime has been too fully documented to permit denial. The world has been too well advised to allow of any semblance of a reasonable doubt.

It would be well, we believe, if pictures of German atrocities of this war could be exhibited upon a regular anniversary throughout the coming years, as a reminder to peace loving nations that the expenditure of force to prevent future war is fully justified by the toll of lives taken in the current war; lives not only of brave fighting men, but also of helpless, innocent civilians, whose only offense was that of disagreement with the prevailing political party, or whose blood line was not that of the so-called super-race.

State Press Comment

IF FISHERIES ARE TO SURVIVE

(Astorian Budget)

Two current news items bear upon the necessity of those interested in preserving the fishery resources of our rivers and streams mobilizing their forces to insist that federal and state agencies recognize the value of that resource and not forget it in their zeal for other industrial developments. One from Washington tells of a recommendation by the house appropriations committee for an additional rivers and harbors appropriation for various projects including locks and dams on the Snake river and the Umatilla dam. The second from Salem tells of the hiring of an engineer by the Willamette river basin commission and Willamette valley projects committee to promote the building of additional dams on the Willamete and tributaries.

Neither the commercial nor sport fishing interests can rightly be accused of having tried to stop the use of the waters of our streams for other industrial purposes, despite the recent blast given them by John W. Kelley, secretary of the state post-war development commission and ex-officio secretary of the Willamette river basin commission —a blast in which he accused sportsmen and commercial fishing interests of trying to stop $160,000,000 of dam projects. They do insist and will continue to insist, however, that the value of the fishery resource be taken into consideration when dams for power, irrigation, flood control, navigation and other purposes are considered and promoted. Aside from the U. S. engineers, we know of no agency interested in the building of these dams which has given the value of the fisheries any more than a passing thought.

This is particularly true of the agencies which have been promoting the series of dams on the Willamette river. They have ignored the fact that five of the projected dams would be built upon the five main branches of the Willamette which produce the greater part of the spring chinooks and which furnish the principal sport fishery. When the fish people have protested or insisted upon consideration, they have met with ridicule and rebuke.

It might be well to bear in mind that this Willamette valley project has been fostered and promoted with state money, appropriations made by the legislature. These apropriations have been lobbied through by pressure groups despite the fact that the act establishes a precedent difficult to defend. When before did the state ever take taxpayers' money to support the interests of one group over another? The Willamette Valley Flood Control association is nothing more or less than a glorified chamber of commerce working for the direct interests of one district of the state, and it has been financed by the state. There have been similar associations to promote irrigation districts, the Bonneville and Umatilla dams, highway building, military and naval defense and for various other beneficial projects but they raised their own money from those to be benefited, from private sources, rather than running to the state for tax money.

Unless the sports and commercial fishery interests get together and fight for the wildlife of the streams, they will find that the groups supported by public funds will outmaneuver them and do irreparable damage to one of the state's greatest natural resources.

Baird Describes Loan Made To Elliott Roosevelt

MONTCLAIR, N. J., July 5—(AP)—David G. Baird, New York insurance executive, described as "private and personal investments" the loans totalling $120,000 made by himself and a business acquaintance to Elliott Roosevelt in 1939 in which the two lost approximately $70,000 when the Texas Radio network business venture of the late president's son failed.

The loans were "entered into for profit because the loan carried for the lenders an option to purchase stock in the network at the original offering price," Baird said, "and the gains could have been substantial. The companies did not turn out to be profitable, and the loans were liquidated at losses to the lenders."

He said that through "payment and salvage" he recovered about $30,000 on a $70,000 loan and that his acquaintance, Maxwell M. Bilofsky, a radio tube and electrical apparatus manufacturer, recovered about $20,000 on a $50,000 loan.

Baird said the lenders never purchased stock in the network.

He said he recovered as much as he did because Roosevelt gave him some Transcontinental Broadcasting company stock as collateral. He said he had known young Roosevelt, now a brigadier general in the army, for a number of years, but only in a business way, and added that, as far as he knew, President Roosevelt was never apprised of the loan. He termed himself a political independent with no political connections, and said he had never had any government contracts or negotiations.

Counsel for John Hartford, president of the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea company, revealed recently that Hartford had lost $196,000 of a $200,000 loan to Roosevelt and written it off as a bad debt in his 1942 income tax return.

When queried about the tax angle of his loan, Baird replied, "no comment."

Coast Loop Sees 3 Shut-Outs, One Handed Portland

(By the Associated Press)

San Francisco's Seals, beaten by the Sacramento Solons 8-3 last night, are now three full games behind the second place Seattle Rainiers, who again are separated by only 4½ tilts from the Pacific Coast league's front-running Portland Beavers.

Seattle gained a full tilt on the pacesetters with a tight 1-0 victory over the Los Angeles Angels as Portland was being blanked 10-0 by the Oakland Acorns. Hollywood's Stars took their third straight from San Diego 6-0 to complete the night's schedule.

Seattle's left fielder, Norbert, broke up a tight pitching duel with a seventh-inning home run, his 12th of the year. The round-tripper was one of three hits issued by the Angels' Osborn. Los Angeles rapped out six swats off Hurler Chet Johnson, but was unable to bunch them for any tallies.

Oakland's 10-0 triumph came at the expense of two Portland moundsmen, Cohen and Carr. Mann, Oakland tosser, spaced eight Beaver hits and whiffed eight.

LETTERS to the Editor

TRAFFIC CONDITIONS ON STREETS HERE CRITICIZED

Editor News-Review:

Somebody must be responsible for clearing up the traffic mess on Oak, Cass and Lane where they intersect Stephens. This afternoon at 5:20 I saw a line of cars tied up for seven minutes on Cass street. The line emptied slowly into Stephens and filled up again on the end and was at no time below the Fern. It ran solidly across the Cass and Rose intersection and tied up traffic on Rose. I saw a doctor from the Veterans' hospital try in vain to get moving; I hope no one was waiting for his services. Dr. Shoemaker has already drawn attention to the Oak and Stephens intersection. I indorse everything he said and I want to add that this particular crossing takes on an added hazard when school opens in September.

I do not know what public body of men has the obligation in this matter, nor do I know what is the solution to the problem. The problem is obvious; in fact it has long ago passed that stage. The public deserves a quick solution thereof.

The other change of time to watch for is on Monday and Tuesday nights, Jimmy Fidler moves from the 6:15 spot on Tuesday to the 9:30 time on Monday night . . . and that means that "Snapshots in the Local Frame" will also have to move. Here again, we approve of the time change . . . because beginning this week you'll hear Snapshots at 8:30 on Tuesday evenings and we feel sure that you will like the earlier time. Be sure to check these program changes so you won't miss any of the special features. Now then . . for tonight . . . Double or Nothing at 6:30 . . . the last Friday night broadcast for your favorite quiz show. They make their bow on the new 6:30 Sunday time a week from this Sunday. Cavalcade of Sports at 8:00 . . . ## Lipscomb, Olson Matched on Next Mat Slate Here

Jack Lipscomb, the so-called "Hoosier Hot Shot," will make his wrestling debut before Douglas county grappling addicts at the Roseburg armory Saturday night. Matchmaker Don Owon announced here today that he had signed the Indiana villain in a semi-final match against Milt Olson, extremely popular ex-coast light-heavyweight champion from Minnesota.

Lipscomb, despite a thick waistline, is one of the roughest and toughest matment in the business. He has been ranked among the top ten men in the light-heavyweight class for the past six years by Ring magazine. Specializing in heart blows and a winning half-Boston crab, Lipscomb is one of the most feared matmen in the game. He is difficult to maneuver out of position and is constantly on top of his opponent. Olson has proved his ability before local fans, however, and will have an enthusiastic following in the skirmish against Lipscomb.

Attracting the most interest, and promising to fill the local armory arena to capacity, will be the Pacific coast junior heavyweight championship bout between Champion Georges Dusette and Challenger Paavo Katonen.

The headliner promises to be the top scientific classic in local mat history—with plenty of fireworks tossed in for good measure. While both are clean matmen, neither will hesitate to open up with flurries of fisticuffs when necessary.

The program is one of the most promising of the season, according to Douglas county railbirds. Elton Owen will referee the matches.
