European Business Men Shell-Shocked, Oil Executive Says

NEW YORK, July 12.—(AP)—Eugene Holman, president of Standard Oil Co. (N. J.), recently returned from Europe, said that Americans dealing with European businessmen must consider them "a bunch of shell-shocked people for which recovery will be a long, drawn-out process."

He said that although physical bomb and war damage to plants in Europe were huge, this was greatly outweighed by the "terrible moral damage to nationals there, many of whom appear on the verge of nervous breakdowns."

"It is important for us to get American technicians in Europe as soon as possible—not so many in numbers but in know-how," he said.

"Many of these persons can't even think clear right now. They do want to talk to someone they know and can trust, however. They want to find out what has been going on in the past four or five years while they were held virtual prisoners."

"Some were in concentration camp or held as hostages. After spending these war years knowing they were not devoting their time to a useful purpose, they want to get back in harness as soon as possible. They want someone to hold their hands."

"The sooner they get started on reconstruction through the help of American technicians, the sooner their nervous tension will disappear and along with it the look as if they expected someone to stick a gun in their back at any time."
