In the Day's News

In action, he says. They've seen it win battles. They've seen it get things done. They've seen all the marvels of disciplined organization. They know it works, in its way.

But, he adds, they DON'T LIKE IT. They want to be done with it as soon as possible. When they get out of uniform, they want to run their lives in their own way.

He isn't so sure of the officers. "A lot of these men who are officers in this man's army," he says, "are making more money than they ever made before. They have acquired the habit of command—the kind of command that is based on rank rather than on the building up of a business and the meeting of payrolls with EARNED money. And a considerable number of them have been touched with the tin-god divinity that goes with having emblems on your shoulders—all the way from gold bars to chickens. I sometimes doubt whether they'll ever be able to recover from it."

THIS air corps colonel (who never forgets that he came into the army out of civilian life and is just a civilian in uniform—and never lets anybody else forget it, he says) is particularly concerned about the men in the combat end of the air corps. "They're a special breed," he says. "For years now they've LIVED on excitement. The best of them are a daredevil lot. In the nature of things, they're the heroes of this war. Whether they'll be able to de-heroize themselves and get down to the ordinary levels of civilian life in time of peace is more than I'm able at the moment to say."

It's true enough, he adds, that after this war ends we're going to have to maintain an air force on a military scale that we've never dreamed of before, and this will provide a temporary place for those whose life is flying and who won't be able to find a job with the commercial air outfits.

BUT, he says, it won't be a PERMANENT place. A combat flier is old at 30, and a lot of these boys will be rubbing 30 almost before they know it. "When I let myself worry, which is seldom," he says, "I do a special job of it in behalf of these men of the combat end of the air force. Their job of readjustment is going to be a big one."

COMING down the coast on a train the other day was a dischargee who had been out just two weeks. He had more than 200 points. He had landed at Casablanca, had fought as a green infantryman in Tunisia, had landed on Sicily and fought his way up through that island, had gone ashore as a veteran at Anzio, then up the leg of Italy's boot and finally through France and into Germany with the 7th army. He'd seen about all there was to see in Europe.

He'd been out just two weeks, had been married and was just winding up his honeymoon and going back to go to work at his old job. He was sitting on the world, and didn't care who knew it. He is one who is going to re-induct all right.

ON the same train was a boy with 143 points. He'd been

TRUMAN AT POTSDAM

By Charles V. Stanton

World-wide attention is focused this week upon the meeting of the Big Three in Potsdam. Curiously, the spotlight which, in previous meetings, was centered upon one who sought and gloried in its revealing illumination, now, with even greater brilliance, holds in its beams an humble man whom fate has placed in a most difficult role.

How well can Truman play the part assigned to him, following, as he does, a man artful and practiced on the international stage? That is the question on the lips of millions today.

Truman has one great advantage: He has a sympathetic audience.

Roosevelt had become to the world a symbol of freedom and democracy. He had become to many unfortunate peoples the personification of liberty. His place was a peculiarly personal one—glorification of the man himself rather than his position as leader of a great nation, founded upon the principles of freedom and democracy.

Personally, we believe Truman will emerge from the Big Three conference fully successful in the task upon which he has embarked, elevated in public opinion to full rank and calibre with his two distinguished conferees.

We anticipate, however, that Churchill and Stalin will find the tone of the Potsdam conference somewhat different than previous meetings of big power representatives.

Critics of the late Mr. Roosevelt often claimed it was easy to sell him a "bill of goods," and that in his extreme idealism and internationalism, he failed, in some instances, to fully protect the interests of the United States. Whether that criticism is based on fact probably will not be known until all information on those meetings becomes public.

While Mr. Truman, judging from his actions since taking over the duties of president, is not lacking in idealism, he demonstrates an extremely practical nature.

In one respect he exemplifies the virtues of the animal associated with the state of his nativity as well as the party he represents.

The mule is an independent, yet affectionate and trustworthy animal. He is a hard worker and will carry heavy loads without complaint. He is extremely sure-footed and will find his way unflinchingly in darkness or in storm.

We imagine Truman will be found most cooperative in attempting to reach accord on important problems brought before the Big Three meeting. But we doubt very much if he will be "sold short," nor do we anticipate he will accept appeasement in any shape or form in exchange for personal aggrandizement.

Truman does not appear to be awed by the company with which he is associated. Appearances indicate he has formulated definite opinions with regard to the course to be pursued and that the opinions have been formed only after careful study and deliberation, in which he sought counsel from congressional leaders and men familiar with international affairs.

Truman has won the confidence of the country. Despite the fact that he has served for only a few months, he has received widespread approval for his cabinet shake-ups, his democratic policies, his cooperation with Congress and his recognition that part of the United States lies west of the Mississippi river. Undoubtedly he is fully aware of the confidence and support he enjoys and is bolstered by this fact as he enters into the all-important conference.

DIAL-LOG

Hope you have lots of time for listening tonight because this is the night that the air lanes are loaded with good shows. Spotlight Bands at 6:30, Human Adventure at 7:00, Lone Ranger at 7:30, Main Line at 8:00, Fresh Up Plays at 8:30, Spotlight Bands presents Al Donahue and his Orchestra from the U. S. naval air station at Alameda. Human stationed in Alaska, and lives in Alaska. He would get his discharge in two more days, and was going back to Alaska to see the folks.

He will have $3800 in back pay coming to him, and after he takes his little fling in the home town, he's coming back to the state of Washington and buy himself a farm.

Someone said to him: "Your $3800 will give you a pretty good leg up on a GI loan, won't it?" "GI loan, hell!" was his answer. "I've seen all this government money I ever want to see. What I do from here on out is going to be on my own."

THERE is one of the rugged individualists the colonel was talking about.

Japan Awaiting Decisive Moment, Paper Declares

SAN FRANCISCO, July 18.—(AP)—The Japanese Domei news agency said in a radio broadcast yesterday that "our forces are waiting for the decisive moment to smash the enemy, beyond his ability to recover, with one deadly stroke."

The dispatch declared: "The crack army and navy forces are not permitting these enemy activities without a counter strategy."

"For that decisive moment of battle, it is vitally necessary that we preserve our strength and strike with lightning effect. We must not move until the time is ripe. We must not play into the enemy's hands."

Domei's broadcast was made just before the U. S. Third fleet, for the third time in four days, stood off the shores of Japan and shelled industrial targets.

Domei frankly pointed out that the fleet was indulging in "systematic" attempt to destroy military and production facilities, that southern Japan's Kyushu island has come within the perimeter of land based American planes on Okinawa and Iwo Jima, and that the B-29s range from Kyushu to Kanto in the north.

Past Wars Recalled
Recalling the fleet attacks were the first on the Japanese homeland since the British, Dutch and American fleets attacked Shimoda in 1854, Domei brooded: "This bluntly reveals the seriousness of the war situation."

Domei also recalled the Russo-Japanese war and that on August 4, 1904, Admiral Kamimura defeated the Russians and gained control of the Japan sea. "As in 1904, the Japanese must also await the right moment."

LETTERS to the Editor

FOOD SHORTAGE DRAWS SARCASM UPON OPA

Editor, News-Review:
Ancient these controversies about the shortage of food, and what has become of Hitler, the first, in my mind, in importance is the former, though from a confidential poll of associates and employees of the OPA, I am sure, and with others at large, including farmers (there are no restrictions we hope, on any kind of private poll of public opinion, and we are convinced that this kind of poll is more authentic than any other) we have concluded there may be some connection between the disappearance of Hitler from Europe, and the shortage of food in the U. S.

Who knows? He may be hiding in some OPA agency here, though no one has yet heard of his appointment in high circles. No doubt this is a military secret, and the time is not yet ripe to disclose it to the American people. It might cause national disunity. If so, we may soon see more efficiency in this alphabetical set up than in the past.

Understand we are not holding any brief for Hitler, or sympathy for his methods; they are as abhorrent to us as the regulations of the OPA, which smack so much of his regime that we cannot disassociate the two.

We are not speaking from a pinnacle or high tower looking down upon the multitude, but from the ground up. Do not infer that the blame rests with our local boards or local fellow citizens, but with the bunglers in Washington, D. C.

These swivel chair experts take a place (at government expense of course) and make a flying trip across the country, see some green fields beneath them, and some dry ones, and conclude between poker games, if they happen to look down at a dry area, that there is going to be a shortage of some kind of crop; then go back to Washington, to the Pentagon building or some equally congested place (congested with stenographers and secretaries) and look through the files from A.B.C. to Z. to find out what it is that there is a shortage of. Since they were too far above the crop being grown, they saw below the weeds, stumps, logged off by Paul Bunyan, and not cattle, and those yellow objects nodding in the sun (very sparsely) were square chunks of creamery butter; so naturally there must be a shortage of that also.

Now we timber workers have gotten about as close to nature as we can without going barefooted, and living on roots and berries, though there is in prospect both conditions, so our considered opinions should count for

Accident Causes Listed as Farm Safety Week Nears

Some 17,000 farm dwellers are killed in accidents yearly in this country. That is equal to wiping out the entire population of Astoria and Bend.

Time lost from farm accidents last year equaled that required to produce five bushels of wheat for every person in the United States.

Careful checking of all canning equipment before using may prevent death or injury. Even canning is the same as inviting an accident to happen.

More farm people were killed by accidents in the first two years America was in the war than there were Americans killed in the war itself.

One in 37 farms had a disastrous experience with fire in the five-year period 1936-40. Care and advance precautions saved many from disaster.

Two-fifths of the total farm accidents in 1943 occurred in the home. Falls head the list of causes.

An average of 10 lives are lost in farm fires each day in this country.

Carelessness in handling livestock causes approximately one-fourth of all farm accidents. The "unloaded" gun and the tame bull cause hundreds of "accidental" deaths. All are preventable.

Careless operation of tractors and farm machinery causes about half of all farm accidents. Alert today—alive tomorrow.
