Japan Expected To Fold up Under Terrific Mauling

By DeWITT MacKENZIE, AP Foreign Affairs Writer
There's a growing (though softly spoken) belief among professional observers that the Japanese homeland may fold up under the combined allied bombardment and blockade before the time for amphibious invasion arrives.
This thought is based on the knowledge that the average human mind and body can stand only so much punishment without cracking up. It's true that fanatical Jap soldiers have been battling to the death, and Japanese civilians might do the same in face of invasion. However, I think we shall make a mistake if we assume that fighting to a finish in hand-to-hand combat is analogous to dying from starvation combined with fierce bombardment from far-distant warplanes and warships against which there's little or no defense. It takes a stout mentality to stand up long against an "intangible" foe.

Tokyo Worry Increasing
The Tokyo government has been making no bones about the gravity of the crisis, and signs of official worry have been increasing. It would be worth something to know what the Mikado and his captains are thinking as the result of the terrific assault of the past several days. The appearance of British bombers in Japanese skies is in itself an ill omen for Nippon, for it bespeaks the gathering of allied forces in the Orient. It means that the fighting machines of Europe are arriving in force.

For days past, Admiral Halsey's American fleet has cruised along the northern coast of Japan with guns and carrier-based bombers tearing at enemy shipping, industrial centers and communications like one of the Nippon's own earthquakes. Then yesterday 1,500 American and British carrier planes blasted the Tokyo area in the heaviest seaborne attack of the war.

No Jap Response
It's significant that the Japanese have taken all this without counter blows of any consequence. Their greatly reduced naval fleet remained hidden, not daring to venture out, and thus risk destruction which would leave the motherland without ocean defense against invasion.

Likewise their airforce stayed largely grounded. Possibly the Nipponese are conserving what is left of this fleet for the day of invasion. News dispatches also say one reason for this seeming impotence in the air is lack of gasoline, due to destruction of supply centers and railroads. This amazing striking power which has been unleashed against Japan from the skies involves

Sustained Timber Yield Plan Topic Of Talk at Kiwanis

An interesting talk on sustained yield management of forest lands was presented before the Roseburg Kiwanis club at its regular Tuesday luncheon meeting by Harry I. Nettleton, O. and C. forester in charge of research and education.
Mr. Nettleton recounted the history of the Oregon and California grant lands, which were given the Oregon and California Railroad company to finance construction of the present Southern Pacific railroad line through Oregon and northern California. He told how terms of the grant were violated by the railroad company, resulting in reversion of the lands in the federal government, and the various difficulties encountered in administration.
The present form of administration, established in 1937, he stated, has adopted a program of sustained yield management, designed to provide a continuous supply of timber for lumbering communities. In Douglas county, he stated, the cutting capacity of existing mills is nearing the allowable cut, and within five years will have reached capacity equal to annual growth.

Instruction Dated To Fight Pullorum

The state Department of Agriculture announces a two-day course of instruction on the stained-antigen field test for pullorum disease and on the regulations for supervised pullorum testing of chickens. It is to be given August 1-2 in the poultry building at Oregon State college, Corvallis. Enrollment for this instruction will be limited to 40 persons. If more than forty persons apply for this instruction, another course will be given at a later date. Those wishing to attend should make application immediately to Dr. E. M. Dickson, department of veterinary medicine, Oregon State college, Corvallis, Oregon. A charge of $1 per person will be made to defray expenses. This fee will be paid to a representative of the state Department of Agriculture when the course is given.
Persons who were authorized pullorum testing agents last year and who have done official testing that has been reported to the supervisor will not be required to take this instruction for reauthorization for the forthcoming season. All other persons who desire to become authorized pullorum testing agents should attend this course of instruction.
