today they would adopt the new Superfort tactic of telling the Japanese where they were going to strike next.

Nearly 600 B-29's returned safely Sunday morning from setting fire to six cities which the Nipponese had been warned were marked for destruction. Five more cities remain on the first list. Another warning, including a new roll of towns to be added to 52 cities already firebombed, is being prepared on Guam.

Washington sources estimated 8,000 Army planes are available for pre-invasion air blows on the enemy homeland. This is in addition to more than 1,500 carrier aircraft and an undisclosed number of shore-based Navy and Marine planes. The Army total includes fast B-32 heavy bombers. MacArthur disclosed they have been in operation for two months and not one has been damaged.

Final Smash Shaping

The "most overwhelming forces ever concentrated in military history" will invade Japan in the wake of the sea-air pummeling, said Rear Adm. D. C. Ramsey, chief of staff of the Fifth fleet.

The Japanese asked for it. Premier Suzuki announced his government will ignore the Potsdam ultimatum to surrender unconditionally or be annihilated. Simultaneously he admitted he didn't know how Japan was going to stop pre-invasion attacks from the sea and air. He left the problem "with absolute confidence in the hands of our strategists."

At the same time, Australians protested the Potsdam ultimatum was too lenient. Unofficial Japanese sources, while protesting the horrible cruelty of B-29 fire raids, said "reconciliation still was possible."

Most startling evidence of Nipponese inability to halt Allied attacks was the fact that not a single American warship has even been damaged in three weeks of raiding Japan. During that time the Allies have destroyed or damaged 915 Nipponese ships and small craft, and 1,706 planes. They have carried out more than half a dozen shore bombardments, paced by the 16-inch guns of the U. S. battleship Massachusetts and the 14 inches of Britain's battleship King George V, leveled or set fires raging through key railway installations and propeller plants.
