Business Fights Ban on Retail Price Increases

ings, as disclosed by a retailers' spokesman before the meeting ended, condemned the policy in these words:

"During hostilities retailers accepted cost absorption as a necessary wartime measure with specific assurances that his device would not be extended beyond a narrow list of low price essential items.

"Absorption is uneconomic, unsound and inequitable. It has no place in a peacetime competitive economy."

Specifically, the committee made these four recommendations:

1. Adoption of a "broad and realistic" policy of removing price controls from non-essential goods.

2. Immediate dropping of the so-called "map"—maximum average price program.

(This requires that the average of all price lines handled by some retailers, mainly clothing and textile stores, go no higher than the average of 1943.)

3. Immediate elimination of all pricing methods which are based on average costs of earnings of an entire industry.

(Such a method, retailers argue, places an unfair profit squeeze on dealers whose selling costs are higher than average.)

4. Economic—or profit-making—pricing for manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers which "will assure maximum production and distribution."

Truman's Order Target
The committee further held unanimously that it was impossible to frame a "practicable, reasonable and economic" pricing plan as long as President Truman's executive order of Aug. 18 remained unchanged.

Mr. Truman's order—supporting Bowles' program of making dealers, instead of consumers, stand any increased factory costs—said such increase should not be passed on to the public in the form of higher retail prices.

About 40 retail spokesmen—representing the National Retail Dry Goods association, National Retail Furniture association, American merchants from many cities—attended the meeting with OPA.

Gulf Hurricane Eases; Losses Reach Millions

high tides on the upper Texas, extreme west Louisiana coast will gradually subside today," the last advisory said.

Wharton, Tex. center of the storm last night, was well boarded up against the 100-mile-an-hour winds which struck it. The city of 4,000 population, about 60 miles southwest of Houston, suffered electric power failure, restored, partially today.

Houston Drenched
A report from Wharton said property damage was severe at El Campo. A town in the same area. The roof of the El Campo hospital blew off and about 30 patients were evacuated to hospitals in Wharton.

Gales that reached 55 miles-per-hour ripped through Houston last night and many sections of the battered-down city were inundated by blinding, torrential rains that measured more than seven inches. Transportation facilities were disrupted and more than 15,000 persons in Harris county sought shelter in public buildings, schools and churches.

Black Markets Crumble Under New Goods Output

the OPA is allowing manufacturers to charge more because their production costs have gone up. But retailers and wholesalers are supposed to "absorb" these increases so the public won't suffer.

Toys to Be Plentiful
Some more developments in the nation's ponderous progress from war to peace:

Toys—There will be plenty for Christmas, but most of them will be the wartime kind that were in the stores last year. Government officials and industry sources predicted only the barest handful of tricycles and metal wagons.

Men not working—Robert C. Goodwin, head of the U. S. employment service, said nearly 2,000,000 war workers have lost their jobs since Japan surrendered.

New 3,385,000 strong, announced it will be down to 550,000 in one year. That means 2,835,000 will be released. (They will need jobs.)

Used Car Prices Drop
The National Automobile Dealer association said the future flood of new autos has caused the first downward break in the price of used cars. Most of them now are selling below price ceilings.

The decrease so far is about $25 a car, on the average.

Occupation by Spearhead Given Polite Reception

The task of this vanguard is to set up communications and prepare for the arrival Thursday of General MacArthur and 7,500 airborne troops. With MacArthur will be Lt. Gen. Robert L. Elchberger, whose Eighth army will move into the Tokyo area.

Rear Adm. Oscar C. Badger, aboard the cruiser San Diego, moved into Tokyo bay at the head of 10 warships spearheading allied fleets involved in the occupation. As Badger steamed cautiously through the mine-swept and gun-lined entrance to the bay, Admiral Nimitz announced that every Pacific fleet force will be involved in landing occupation units in the enemy's broken empire and patrolling conquered waters.

Jan Remnants Lined Up
Powerful units of Admiral Halsey's Third fleet lay at anchor in Sagami bay or rode at sea nearby, backing up Badger's task force, which is paving the way for landings at the Yokosuka naval base and three guardian islands by 10,000 marines and bluejackets. Fleet dispatches said they would start going ashore tomorrow.

Twenty-eight of the 55 Japanese ships which survived the attacks of these combined fleets and air and submarine forces were reported lined up at the Sasebo naval base of Southern Japan ready to surrender. Most of them were destroyers or submarines. Two other Nipponese submarines were brought into the U. S. fleet anchorage in Sagami bay by American prize crews.

The Japanese apparently had compiled implicitly with orders to remove breech blocks from the 116 major caliber guns along the green and forbidding shore. In Sagami bay they had followed instructions to the point where even the customary fishing craft were pulled up at the docks.

The commander of the former axis submarine base at Penang on the approaches to Singapore was bluntly told today to meet British naval officers at sea with full details of minefields in the area as a preliminary to surrender discussions.

Sullen Japanese Sign
Three sullen Japanese yesterday signed preliminary surrender arrangements for all of the Mikado's forces in Southeast Asia and the Dutch East Indies. They were told to clear the way for immediate British occupation of Malaya and its Singapore naval base. Occupation of the Indies was to follow the Sept. 2 signing of formal surrender papers aboard the battleship Missouri in Tokyo bay.

Gen. Yamashita, who won the nickname of "the Tiger" when he conquered Malaya and Singapore, supplied American officers with a map of his carefully guarded program of public works to furnish jobs when there is a shortage of gainful employment.

"The bill," he said, "is very specific in directing both the president and the Congress to utilize all other means at the disposal of the government in an effort to keep the stream of private consumption and investment expenditures at the full employment level before resorting to the use of government financial resources.

"It must be recognized, however, that these other methods will not always be sufficiently effective or sufficiently quick acting to prevent a deflationary spiral from getting under way. Under such circumstances, it is only the assurance that the government will use its financial power to prevent shrinking markets that will induce business to continue to produce full employment levels."
