for what he consumes himself out of his own production. (We simply continued the German laws, as being established and understood by Germans.)

In an economy where food is EVERYTHING and the value of money open to acute and universal suspicion, you know what that leads to. As a matter of fact, the German farmer will sell FOR MONEY on the black market only at a fantastic price, for he can't eat money and besides he has grave doubts as to whether the money now in circulation will ever be worth much—if anything.

Even invasion currency, which is pegged and backed by the allies, commands no confidence among the common run of Europeans as a permanent possession, for no matter how sound the plans for its ultimate redemption as contemplated by our higher financial authorities these plans are unknown to the average small individual—who keeps his fingers crossed as to money and wants THINGS.

So, when the German farmer sells food on the black market for money he wants it in gummy sack quantities—OR he wants to BARTER it for THINGS.

To feed themselves, the idle city Germans must have either a LOT of money to supplement their scant rations or they must part with things. What to do when physical possessions are gone is causing acute worry.

THAT bring up another black market story that is distinctly not of the parlor variety. But it came to this writer from a source that is above reproach as a matter of PERSONAL knowledge—not hearsay. It brings out with such crystal clarity the starkness of Western Europe's present state after years of war and its accompanying disintegration that it shouldn't be suppressed.

An American soldier was sitting on a bench watching the strange spectacle that is the Berlin black market—which is a mixture of want and greed and human suffering and privation in the raw such as had not been seen for centuries until this war brought Western Europe to its present state.

A German woman and her daughter sat down beside him. They were obviously of the better class—women of CULTURE as opposed to what we have come to know as German KULTUR.

They were undergoing obvious mental suffering. Finally the mother turned abruptly to the soldier and said, with some effort: "If you will give me a package of cigarettes and a candy bar, you may spend tonight with my daughter."

SORDID? Cheap? Disgusting? Yes, such things usually are sordid and cheap and disgusting. But these days stark tragedy is stalking Western Europe. Life here, for millions, is down to the raw. Down to fundamentals.

And a package of cigarettes and a candy bar are MORE than mere luxuries here. They can be BARTERED for simple foods in considerable quantities. And it is being said grimly and rather often around here that in a lot of Europe women are about all that is left to barter.

ANYWAY, the American soldier declined the proffered exchange but GAVE the cigarettes and the candy bar. You're hearing a lot of cynical and salacious tales about what American soldiers are doing over here. A few of them, yes. But remember that the American army is a cross

DESTROY INCENDIARISM

By Charles V. Stanton

Evidence of deliberate incendiarism was found connected with a forest fire which burned over about five acres in the Hog's Back area of the North Umpqua district Tuesday night. The fire was set by some person who used a ball of binder twine soaked in kerosene. A long piece of string pulled out from the ball acted as a fuse, giving time for the incendiary to escape from the area before the fire was discovered.

Had the blaze not been quickly extinguished it would have destroyed a most valuable stand of timber. A large number of men would have been temporarily thrown out of employment. Operation of a mill would have been halted. A most beautiful recreation spot would have been converted into an ugly scar.

Fortunately, the fire was brought under control before any material damage was caused.

Incendiarism has been decreasing from year to year in Douglas county. Not many years ago deliberate burning was the principal source of forest fires. Timber was abundant. Stumpage was low in price. In fact, many timber owners surrendered their lands rather than pay taxes. Farmers burned nearby hillsides to secure grazing lands. Large areas were set afire in advance of the hunting season in order that deer might be killed more easily as the animals came in to feed off green sprouts. Incendiary rode horses through forest lands tossing firebrands beside trails. Often as many as 50 to 100 fires would be started in a single night.

But in late years the general population has learned to realize the great value of our forest resource. They learned, too, that for every acre of timber land destroyed by fire a corresponding increase in tax load was placed upon other classifications of property. We are rapidly learning to evaluate wood in terms of payrolls, tax income, better roads, homes, business and recreation. We are beginning to recognize that a person who will, through carelessness or intent, set fire to our forests is robbing every one of us, just as surely and definitely as if he had shoved his hand into our pockets and removed our wallets.

That little fire on the North Umpqua, across from the spined ridge from which the area derives its name of Hog's Back, could have cost Douglas county many thousands of dollars, for that timber was sold by the county on long-term contract, with money to be paid as the timber is removed. That fire could have cost many dollars to every taxpayer. The county court prefers long contracts on large timber sales because such method will continue county income to offset direct taxation. That fire could have shut down at least temporarily, and possibly permanently, a sawmill employing a very large number of men. Those men would have lost wages, which, in turn, would have affected every business house in Roseburg. That fire could have cost lives of fire fighters. It could have destroyed a choice recreational spot. All this, and more, could have resulted just because some person, as yet unidentified, held a grudge against the mill company, or wanted to produce a better hunting spot, or just had a streak of maliciousness.

Such a person is a criminal and should be behind penitentiary bars. He has attempted wholesale robbery. He has endangered lives and property, not through negligence or carelessness, but deliberately and premeditatedly.

The majority of the people of Douglas county are fully aware of forest values and are desirous of preserving the rich resource we possess. There are still a few—a very few—who for various motives will set forest fires if they think they can get away with it.

These few, if they persist in their practice, must be hunted down and treated as common criminals—for such they are. The process of eradication should have the fullest cooperation and support from the general public.

Franco, Lynam to Battle on Saturday Mat Program Here

It will be the Army vs. the Navy at the Roseburg armory Saturday night when Young Franco, highly-touted naval aviator, and Joe Lynam, Army sergeant, clash in the semi-final match of Don Owen's weekly mat show. The bout looms as equally attractive as the headliner between Buck Davidson and Rufus Jones.

Lynam, recently discharged after four years in the South Pacific, is recognized as one of the leading contenders for both the world lightweight and junior heavyweight championships, a title he was forced to relinquish when he returned to the United States.

Lynam a former Redmond High school football player, was men-toried in professional wrestling by Bill Kenna, one of Oregon State's famed "Iron men" in football and a grappling villain. Lynam, however, is a clean scientist and his bout against Franco, a Roseburg product who has been impressive in local appearances, should be a masterpiece.

Headline To Be Sizzler While the semi-final will be a clean, scientific match, the headliner between Rufus "Pinkie" Jones and Buck Davidson is certain to develop into one of the most torrid Donnybrookes in local mat history.

Douglas county fans have been the only mat followers in the state to witness the loss of a fall by the "Birmingham Bomber", who defeated Wally Archib, last week, but dropped one fall to the clever Chinese Jiu-Jitsu artist.

Davidson, the kidney-punching ex-marine from Texas, will likely find himself in an unusual situation—the popular favorite. The head-butting Negro, who foams at the mouth when about to make a "kill", has already been established as one, if not the most hated grappler ever to appear at the Roseburg armory.

The "Alabama Assassin" will find no easy slidding against Davidson who will be giving away some weight, but nothing in the way of giving and taking rough mat work.

DIAL-LOG

By SUSAN

Friday night and heaven be praised, we don't have to turn sports editor any more when Friday rolls around. Not that we didn't like the fights, but we weren't equipped with the right vocabulary to tell you what it was all about. Tonight you'll hear Freedom of Opportunity, and since this is one of the best shows on the air, it isn't necessary to produce any superlatives. We'll just remind you that it will be on the air at 8:30 and that the whole family will enjoy it. Tonight, against a special musical background, the life and career of Sigmund Romberg will be dramatized for your enjoyment. We'll also remind you that Hi Neighbor is now heard at 9:30 immediately following Rex Miller's news commentary. If you haven't yet acquired the Rex Miller habit, we'd suggest that you start listening as of tonight. Mr. Miller is now heard twice daily Monday through Friday. He follows Fulton Lewis, Jr., in the afternoon and the Newspaper of the Air at night. Tough spots to fill in both cases, but he more than holds his own. No hoop-de, no extra fanfare or flourishes, which makes him our favorite of all of the commentators. Please note: we said "commentators." Glen Hardy's straight news reporting twice daily is still the best all around news service on the air. Kid department: Remember tomorrow morning at 9:00 o'clock you have a date at "The House of Mystery". The address, 1490 on the dial.

Universal Blood Type Is Obtained From Convicts

CANON CITY, Colo., Sept. 20.—(AP)—Successful conclusion of 35-day experiments to develop a universal blood type, conducted among the inmates of Colorado State prison, who volunteered as "guinea pigs" was announced today by Maj. L. H. Tisdall of New York.

The convicts received transfusions of whole blood, then submitted to periodic checks to determine the reaction. Tisdall said none suffered any "lasting ill effects."

The experiments conducted by the Army studied methods of using group O donor blood universally, and adapting other blood types to the group. Maj. Tisdall said the Army would share the technical knowledge for the benefit of civilians.
