In the Day's News

This country must have a constant powerful armed force to impress the political leaders and the professional soldiers of other nations, both friendly and unfriendly, that no act of aggression, however sudden, could succeed.

GENERAL MARSHALL urged

also a unified DEPARTMENT OF WAR instead of our present split-responsibility, split-leadership War and Navy departments. That also sounds reasonable.

A unified department of war would be a central intelligence controlling and directing, instantly and completely, ALL the weapons with which we fight.

GENERAL ARNOLD tells other senators at a science hearing in Washington that atomic bombs, turned into GUIDED missiles with wings and a television head, can make PRESENT anti-aircraft defense utterly helpless.

GENERAL ARNOLD asked

Arnold: "Is there ANY defense against the atomic bomb as such?" General Arnold answered: "At the PRESENT stage of development, the only way is to stop it before it starts."

IN the light of present world conditions, it seems to this writer that instead of INTERNATIONALIZING the atom bomb we should keep the secret as long as we can, use whatever power it confers on us as wisely and justly as is humanly possible, and use the knowledge we already have to GET THE JUMP on defense against it.

MORE HOSPITAL BEDS

By Charles V. Stanton

Addition of 164 beds for neuropsychiatric patients at the Veterans facility in Roseburg has been approved by General Omar N. Bradley, veterans administrator, the project having received presidential sanction.

The only criticism to be offered is that additions authorized for Oregon hospitals are totally inadequate to meet anticipated needs. The program calls for 150 more beds at the Portland hospital and 164 at Roseburg.

According to estimates by the Veterans administration, the cost of providing accommodations in N-P hospitals amounts to approximately $6,500 per bed. U. S. Senator Guy Cordon reports that plans for the Roseburg facility call for a new building which, in addition to hospital beds, will provide for recreational and occupational therapy, with cost estimated at $1,300,000.

The facility at Roseburg is laid out in accordance with an over-all pattern calling for more than a score of buildings. Veterans hospitals, however, have been placed in the "pork barrel" and, instead of developing existing facilities to the fullest extent, political pressure is forcing the administration to develop many new sites.

Much pressure is being placed upon the administration to locate a new hospital in Southern Oregon or Northern California, despite the fact that existing sites at Portland and Roseburg have not been expanded to capacity.

In Roseburg's case, the city purchased and donated a tract of more than 400 acres, while the State of Oregon surrendered its state soldiers' home, with 50 acres of ground, all with the understanding that a domiciliary unit would be constructed and maintained.

It would seem obvious that it would be more economical to improve existing sites to their capacity rather than adding new units in neighboring areas. Perhaps the cost of $6,500 per bed could be shaved somewhat if such program were observed.

But while we see inadequacies in the Veterans administration's program, nevertheless it is a great satisfaction to know that steps are being taken to provide additional hospital capacity for those deserving men who must depend upon the federal government for care in the months and years of illness that lie ahead. Certainly, no dollar expended in giving our unfortunate veterans the most efficient service possible should be begrudged.

Here in Roseburg, where we had a state soldiers home for many years before the present federal hospital was built, we have learned to honor and respect veterans domiciled in our community. Perhaps we feel too keenly the failure of the Veterans administration to expand its facility here more rapidly because we are sincerely interested in the hospitalization program and feel that we have much to offer, climatically and otherwise, in contributing to the patient-veteran's well-being.

Coast Grangers, State Officers Meet in Reedsport

REEDSPORT — More than 125 members, including Oregon state grange officers and members of the West Coast Pomona grange, were in attendance at the district conference held in the Legion hall at Reedsport last Wednesday.

State Master Morton Tompkins and Mrs. Tompkins were in attendance, as were O. S. Fletcher, county agent of Lane county; Mrs. Garnet Ruckman, state lecturer; Mrs. Edith Bohner, youth superintendent; Mrs. Hilda Hether, state juvenile superintendent; and Miss Agnes Flint, state home economics chairman, all of whom gave short and interesting talks.

Tompkins was the principal speaker during the evening session and complimented the local organization on its excellent attendance. District Deputy Bert Roberts of Smith River presided at the sessions, both morning, afternoon and evening.

WE have no desire to run the world, if it were possible (if ISN'T) we'd like to get away from our present status as a world power and go back to happy absorption in our OWN affairs. But we can't trifle with things such as the atom bomb. From here on out, we're going to have to look out for ourselves first—keeping always in mind that our use of such power, if by good fortune we can RETAIN it, must be wise and just and fair.

Failure as Mine Promoter, Success as Chemist Sums up Career of Late Roseburg Man

By FRED M. WRIGHT

While not a doctor but a proficient chemist, Col. William H. Taylor was perhaps one of the best known men in Douglas county for his work in directing the people of the county along the road to health and relief from many ailments.

Colonel Taylor came from New York to Douglas county in the early '90s, fresh from the lights of Broadway, where he knew, and was on familiar terms, with many of the celebrities of that age.

The conversation had pertained to Col. Taylor's delinquent hotel bill. He explained he had used all of his personal funds to pay outstanding bills of the New York corporation, expecting to be reimbursed, but that the money had not arrived.

He later learned that following the conversation with Mrs. McClallen he had started south on Main street to consider his course of action, and wound up riding out of town with a farmer, finding refuge at the farm with his friend Col. Day.

There was a small cabin on or near Day's holdings, and Col. Taylor took up residence there. Soon stories began to trickle in from Oallia of cures being effected by the colonel's remedies.

Naturally, he could not charge for his advice and treatment, as he had no license as a physician, but the people of the district provided him with food and a considerable amount of donated cash.

From his many chemical formulas, the best known was "Taylor's Specific," which was an article that gained in popularity and became a household remedy to be found on the shelf of nearly every home in the district.

The writer was employed at that time at the McClallen hotel and often did chores and ran errands for Taylor. In fact, I became one of his confidants and he turned over to me the key to his hotel rooms.

Visits to his apartment were always interesting, and I delighted in viewing the pictures of world-famed celebrities hung on the walls and standing in frames on dressers and tables.

Then one day the bubble burst. Taylor and his foreman came to Roseburg and from messages humming over the wires between Roseburg and New York, I learned that the New York company had withdrawn financial support from the mining venture.

The real reason was never made plain to me. However, Taylor stayed on and attempted to clean up the deal and business for the company. As I remember, he spent a year of his own wealth in cleaning up affairs.

This all happened prior to the Spanish-American war and the Philippine insurrection in 1898. For months Taylor made frequent trips to the mines, but finally settled down in his suite at the hotel. He took his meals at the commercial table in the dining room. Eventually he gave up his apartment and moved into one room. Letters from New York became fewer and fewer.

Taylor gave increasing attention to war strategy and the Alaskan gold rush. One sunny summer morning, while I was sweeping the porch, where the brick building is now located, Taylor came from the dining room and took a chair on the south side of the porch, sitting there alone. Finally Mrs. McClallen came from the office and took a chair alongside him.

They engaged in a long conversation. Mrs. McClallen returned to the office and after a short time Taylor stretched his arms, took a deep breath, stepped off the porch and started south on Main street. That was the last any of us saw of him for more than a year.

A few days later Mrs. McClallen told her son, Roy, and me to pack Taylor's belongings and move them to the storeroom. This we did and it was then I learned for the first time that Taylor was staying at the Col. J. G. Day place at Oallia.

On my return trips, making collections, I was asked about other articles on the circular. Many of them I could and would explain and take orders, but for some I had to refer the person making the query to the colonel, and thus customers began to visit his office.

Horoscope Proves Accurate — One afternoon, when we were both very tired, we sat to rest in the colonel's new office. As he lounged at his desk, he asked me the date of my birth and a few other questions. Then he commenced to tell me about myself.

Among other things he stated I would always retain mental faculties with which to work, but that if anything happened to me through sickness or accident, it would be from the waist down.

No doubt many others now look back on their visits with the colonel, who gave them advice and warning, as he did me, and were helped and encouraged by his words of wisdom and kindly advice, as well as by his remedies, which he never claimed would cure, but which he said might give relief and comfort. I know and remember Colonel Taylor as a good, kindly man, who was honest and sincere, and who took the world in a kindly spirit, knowing that honest integrity and friendship are three essentials in making life worth while.

When Colonel Taylor passed from this world, the common people of the community lost a friend and a benefactor.

Lost Man Finds Way Back After Night in Woods

REEDSPORT — Lieut. Charles Able, of the United States Army air corps, who has been visiting relatives at Gardner for the past week, took a stroll in the woods in the vicinity of Three Mile Wednesday evening after parking his car on a short logging road, just off highway 101, with the intention of spying out a hunting ground for the next day. The lieutenant lost his direction while in the big timber and had to spend the night in the hills.

Clark and Adjutant Earle Sandborne and the membership committee of the local American Legion post, that organization claims to be one of the first, if not the first, in the state to go "over the top" in meeting and exceeding its increased membership quota for the year. The post, which had but 90 members at the start of the drive, now boasts of 119 and is still growing.
