DALIES FRANTZ, FAMOUS AMERICAN PIANIST, GIVES ADVICE FOR GIFTED CHILD

Don't put your child on the concert stage, says Dalies Frantz, paraphrasing the old song. The distinguished young American concert pianist, who will be heard in Roseburg Thursday evening, February 7, at 8:15 o'clock at the Roseburg Junior High School under the auspices of the Community Concert Association, suggests that talented children should not all be led to expect careers on the concert boards; that they should be encouraged to think in terms of other musical occupations, just as important, if not so glamorous.

"There is room for all too few of the talented young people who have set their hearts on appearing in the musical halls of the world," he says. "All talent aside, the concert artist requires special aptitudes for success—physical endurance, excellent health, a capacity for work, and the ability to stand up under fire."

"The quota of disappointments could be cut considerably if parents who have gifted children made them realize from the beginning that music offers a variety of worthwhile occupations."

Mr. Frantz believes that such an attitude, ingrained in young musicians, would also be of tremendous service to music in this country.

He believes that there is a crying need for good teachers, for people who have been well-trained and who can take up the leadership of the musical field in communities all over the United States. The job of creating, inspiring and guiding the musical genius of the country is one of great responsibility, in Mr. Frantz' opinion. It is his earnest wish that more qualified people will see the challenge in the situation and make of teaching and guiding musical life a real and life profession.

Parents with gifted children have the responsibility of advising and encouraging them. Mr. Frantz believes that such parents should consider the entire musical field for their children. "In that way they may eliminate disappointments and immeasurably benefit our musical culture."
