First Aid School In Douglas Slated

"This is a new service on the part of the commission," Bollinger reports, "and Douglas county was selected for the first school because it is the hot spot of the lumber industry in Oregon."

Dr. George Frank has been employed by the commission. It was announced, to conduct five groups in a standard first aid course. Each group will hold a weekly study period for two and one-half hours for a period of eight weeks, a total of 20 hours.

Continue Salvage Of Inedible Fats, Housewives Asked

The food outlook for 1946 has improved greatly in recent weeks. However, the supply of inedible fats and oils necessary for the manufacture of many personal and household items is lower than at any time during previous years.

Reminding local housewives of this critical shortage, John H. Ferguson, chairman of the county AAA committee, pointed out that fat saving must be practiced every day, if existing shortages of laundry soap, paints, textiles, wall paper and other commodities are to disappear. Ferguson's statement is based on word from the USDA Production and Marketing Administration.

During the war years housewives accounted for 10 per cent of the inedible production, and collection must continue at this rate if the supply is to be built up to prewar levels.

The end of rationing has made available more cooking fats, lard, and shortening. With larger supplies now moving from grocery stores into homes, housewives will have a great opportunity to save more used fats than they did when rationing curtailed supplies, Ferguson said.

Edible fats and oils which have become rancid or too highly flavored for further cooking use, should be salvaged and drained into the fat salvage containers and returned to neighborhood dealers.

These fats and oils, in turn, will come back to housewives in soap, skin powders, and many other items now in short supply, Ferguson said.
