case of governments, which aren't bound by the codes of honor and morality that govern private persons.

THERE'S another stock thriller in the news.

It looks at the hour this is written like a DEADLOCK in UNO between Russia and the United States.

Our Byrnes, Russia's Gromyko and FRENCH AMBASSADOR BONNET (maybe to serve as a referee) go into the traditional smoke-filled room at 11 A. M.

Each is accompanied by ONE aide. (In such cases, the fewer present the better when it comes to saving faces.)

They emerge after an hour and three quarters, grimly silent, rebuffing the reporters with the old standby of diplomacy: "I have nothing to say."

THE problem is what to do about the Iran ruckus. (In such a way as to save all faces.)

The American position is said to be that though Russian troops are moving out no agreement has YET been made between Russia and Iran—and without a duly reported and OK'd agreement UNO would be left hanging in the air.

Moscow is believed to be intent on by-passing a decision by UNO, and is reported to have instructed Soviet representatives to boycott all sessions at which Iran is discussed with an Iranian official present.

ONE way out is suggested (unofficially)—

Call Iran into the UNO security council MERELY TO PRESENT ITS VIEWS as to whether or not it will suffer by whatever arrangement has been made with Russia on the side, and let it go at that.

(That, of course, would amount to squeezing little Iran between big U. S., Britain and Russia, but if it got as over a rough spot without a fight we'd all be relieved.)

ALL of this sounds absurd.

If you and I and John Doe were in a three-cornered jam of this sort, and none of us wanted to fight, we'd get out of it with much less mumbo-jumbo. Nations are different. They have to save their faces.

It's EXTREMELY serious. If something slips, another war, with all its terrible possibilities of destruction of modern civilization, COULD follow.

About all we little people can do is PRAY—pray that our leaders may have the breadth and the vision and the tolerance to find a way out without fighting.

LET'S close this column on a more personal note—involving a situation that WE CAN DO SOMETHING ABOUT.

The Oregon Food for Famine committee, headed by former Portland Mayor Joe Carson, tells a meeting of state leaders that every Oregon resident will be ASKED to refrain from eating three slices of bread each day and from using one spoonful of fats and oils each day in order to provide more food for the starving people of the world.

BECAUSE of the clouds of propaganda that are loose, there are few things in this world that we can believe. We must believe that millions of people are facing starvation, because it is TRUE.

TREE PLANTING EVENT

By CHARLES V. STANTON

An event of more than passing importance occurred Monday when students from Reedsport and Gardiner High Schools combined, under supervision of state and federal forestry officials, in setting out 30,000 Port Orford cedar seedlings at the north end of Clear Lake, adjoining the Oregon Coast highway.

The entire Lower Umpqua community joined in the ceremony, which was attended by Governor Earl Snell and other state officials; the Douglas County court, numerous forestry representatives and industrial leaders. Governor Snell personally planted the first two seedlings and was an interested spectator as the work progressed most efficiently throughout the day.

It is particularly significant, we believe, that this task was entrusted to the younger generation.

We are on the eve of a new era in forest practices.

Our generation, and those before us, have been most careless and destructive. We have treated our resources with utmost prodigality. We have pooh-poohed the notion we could ever exhaust the great stands of timber which covered so many thousands of our acres. We cut, slashed and burned. We deliberately destroyed billions of board feet of timber, in days when it had little market value, to create better feeding conditions for livestock and even for wild game, little realizing that timber some day would attain the value it bears today.

But we no longer deride the possibility of shortage in supply, for we have before us examples of waste and ruthless destruction in every section of our country where great industries once made their stands, only to be forced to move on to new sites because they had exhausted the supposedly perpetual source of supply.

Now, according to an informed source, we have only enough merchantable timber left to maintain our present rate of cutting for the next 25 years. Either we must adopt new methods or see our timber industries drop off to a mere fraction of present capacity.

Faced at last with necessity, we have begun to formulate policies of sustained yield, selective logging, wood waste utilization and other improved practices. But these, alone, will not preserve the industry. We must restore timber to lands which we have denuded. To accomplish that purpose we have established tree farms and have engaged in an extensive program of reforestation.

The younger generation must assume responsibility for completing the task which our folly has made necessary. Already they have shown much promise. Through the Keep Oregon Green program, hundreds of boys and girls have become interested in forest protection. Thousands of acres of denuded lands have been replanted by boys and girls in various parts of the state. Students in our schools are demonstrating interest in forest resources and have shown most commendable willingness, and even enthusiasm, in cooperating with public and private agencies engaged in conservation, protection and reforestation.

The example set at Reedsport is worthy of emulation throughout the entire Pacific Northwest. As an annual event, the tree planting ceremony should prove an important factor in preserving the great timber resource so vital to continued prosperity of the fast-growing Lower Umpqua community.

Basket Social of Guard Unit Tops in Entertainment

Some of the "best entertainment ever seen in Roseburg was presented this week at the Basket Social sponsored by Oregon State Guard members and the Roseburg Recreation. H. W. Gray, manager of the recreation program, said today.

Gray singled out Edwin Harvey, student at Roseburg High School, as a singer whose future seems as bright as Bing Crosby's, when the famous star was a youth in Spokane.

"That boy has a wonderful voice and deserves a lot of recognition," Gray said. "I knew Bing Crosby when he was in Spokane. He was the kind who was always ready to sing when somebody asked him. Well, Edwin is in the same way, and I think he will go far."

Other highlights on the Basket Social program included a "horse act" with Ann Carter and Roland Barrows, accompanied by George Shanklin, vocal numbers by Lowell and Evalyn Russell, and dance numbers by students in the dance classes of Jane Bissell; a tap dance routine by Larry Sloan and Robert Huff, and "attractive, difficult" tap dance routines by Janet and Joan Bennett, Bobette Huff, and Carolyn Patton. Miss Bissell's dancing classes are sponsored by Roseburg Recreation.

"The people who missed seeing the Basket Social are very unfortunate indeed," Gray said. "Some of this wonderful talent may be seen again tonight at the dance and floor show of the noon, every night, there was a line of people (all with money in their pockets) waiting for a chance AT THE GARBAGE CAN."

"When fairly well-dressed people with money in their pockets wait their chance to get into the garbage can, along with stray dogs and alley cats. HUNGER IS REAL."

It isn't just in Germany. There is such hunger over much of the world.

GOING without three slices of bread and a spoonful of fats and oils each day is little enough.

Wood Pulp Price Boost to Supply Paper Requested

WASHINGTON, March 29.—(AP)—A request by American wood pulp producers for substantial increases in selling prices for wood pulp will be given consideration, GPA officials said yesterday.

Industry representatives said at a closed meeting with the GPA that such increases were needed if paper and paperboard requirements are to be met this year.

The Civilian Production Administration has certified there is not enough wood pulp available in the country to meet requirements for 18,000,000 tons of paper and paperboard products in 1946.

GPA officials declined to disclose the exact amount of increases proposed. They said that price increase for wood pulp from Sweden were not discussed at the session. The Swedish industry has asked increases ranging from $4 to $12 a ton, depending on quality.
