IT sounds reasonable. There are so many aspects of the Russian attitude that sound unreasonable. It pleases us, somehow, to find something in the Russian situation that seems to make sense.

AS to Russia, this is TRUE: The attitude of the American people toward the Russian people is a FRIENDLY attitude. We want nothing so much as to get along with them in peace and amity.

WHY? Well, in trying to answer that question we shall have to soar off into the realms of speculations and surmise.

WE must remember that some 180 million Russians are ruled absolutely by some four or five million members of the communist party.

They MAY fear the western democracies even more than we of the western democracies fear communism.

It is an unfortunate, but HISTORICAL, fact when thoughts such as this begin to run through the minds of the common people.

That has happened over and over in the long centuries of which we have a record. It could happen again in Russia.

WHAT can we do about it? About all we ordinary people can do is to go on feeling friendly toward common, ordinary Russians.

It is doubtless unfortunate, but it still is TRUE, that power wins respect in international dealings. Weakness seldom does.

A FADING PICTURE

By CHARLES V. STANTON The Drain Enterprise has installed a typesetting machine. It no longer bears the distinction of being one of the two newspapers in Oregon on which type was set exclusively by hand.

Installation of the linotype in the office of the Drain weekly was completed recently by Clifford D. and Lilyan Irwin, who purchased the paper several months ago from H. R. Young, veteran publisher.

We miss the old format of the Drain paper, which, in content well deserves its name—Enterprise.

The sight of its columns with type carefully set by hand never failed to stir nostalgic memories—memories of comely women and grizzled men perched on tall stools, hours upon end, as hands with lightning rapidity and unerring accuracy plucked type from cases and into sticks; the endless galleys of used type to be distributed back into cases, with the printer's devil being bawled out roundly for every typographical error, on the claim that he messed up distribution; the careful scrubbing of forms with a bucket of lye water, and another cussing of the printer's devil because he failed to rinse the type thoroughly, leaving it slippery in the moist fingers of the typesetters.

And there are memories, too, of the old cylinder press and feeding in sheets of newsprint by hand, and a clattering old folder, and a Mustang mailer; the musty, grimy shop with what seemed to be acres of floor space to be swept up daily, sorting out leads, quads, rules, and the boss' corncob pipe from the litter of paper and other refuse; the old printers' towel, left unchanged until black and stiff, which hung beside the grimy wash basin; the hooded light bulbs which cast soft yellow islands of light in the half dusk occasioned by unwashed window panes.

Modern methods have relegated the craft of hand-picking type to the limbo of the past. Vast strides have been made in the printer's art, and many new developments are yet to come. Tomorrow's newspapers, decked out in colors, will bear little resemblance to those of yesterday or even today.

Combining scientific advances in communication, transportation, and photography in collection of news, the press is working diligently upon improvements in the field of printing and disseminating the news. New types of presses are in the making. Color process engraving is invading the newspaper field. Improvements in wirephoto technique will soon make the world's best news pictures available to even the smaller newspapers, which, with better engraving processes will be able to reproduce them with greater clarity and, in many instances, in full color.

In these days of stress and speed, demanding complicated machinery to meet the pace of production, it is restful to recall the old days when skillful men and women, through experience and long training, translated the seemingly illegible penciled scrawl of editors and reporters into the news and opinion of the day. But it is a fading picture and soon, perhaps, it will be seen only through the eyes of memory.

dynamic and are built along the means; yes, elastic formula to provide sure-fire action. Katonen and Lynam are both ex-coast champions, Katonen having held the Pacific coast light-heavy-weight crown before losing it to Al Szasz a couple of weeks ago.

Lynam held the coast junior heavyweight title until he lost it recently to Bruno Angelo. Both men will be out to score as impressive a victory as possible in an attempt to get back into the championship picture.

The preliminary should be a colorful affair between Achiu and Kenaston. Achiu will probably resort to the use of his nerve-numbing art to combat the villainous tactics of the ex-Leather-neck.
