Union Chieftains Rap President Truman

dustries during the reconversion period. CIO President Philip Murray was among the latest to blast at Mr. Truman's proposal.

In a telegram to all senators, Murray contended that "in a moment of wild hysteria an attempt is being made to stamper through Congress legislation which has as its sole aim the destruction of the labor movement of this nation."

He lashed out not only at Mr. Truman's emergency strike-control program, but also at the Senate version of the House-approved Case bill.

Murray's broadside was considered as rough treatment as the CIO chief ever gave any administration-sponsored proposal, but AFL President William Green was equally vehement, denouncing the bill as advocating "slave labor under Fascism."

As the two big unions lit out at Mr. Truman's proposals, the CIO United Auto Workers wired Murray urging he take "immediate steps" for "joint action by all organized labor" to defeat the program.

Farmers Also Hit Program

The CIO-AFL attacks came in rapid follow-ups to the announcement of A. F. Whitney, the Trainmen Brotherhood chief, that his union stood ready to pour millions into coming campaigns not only to defeat congressmen voting for Mr. Truman's emergency strike program but also to defeat Mr. Truman in 1948.

The National Farmers Union joined in the fray to assail the emergency program as "naked, open Fascism," and called the situation "a shameful hour in American history."

The National Citizens Political Action Committee also condemned the program as "totalitarian" and urged the Senate to reject it.

Meanwhile Chairman Vandenberg of Michigan called Senate Republicans into conference to-day in an apparent attempt to solidify opposition to President Truman's request for authority to draft strikers in government-seized industries.

Senator Taft said a series of amendments drafted by a special minority committee would be laid before the group.

Immediate indications were that a majority would back the effort to strip pending, House-approved emergency legislation of the draft authority.
