Girl Nearly Dies Trying To Save Drowning Boy

BATTLEGROUND, Wash., July 8.—(AP)—Sixteen-year-old Bud Sanderson, Vancouver, Washington, drowned in the east fork of the Lewis river yesterday and police reported a girl companion almost lost her life in an attempt to save the youth.

State Patrol Sgt. J. H. Williams said Barbara Ann Byrum, 16, also of Vancouver, and the youth tumbled into the water from rocks. The boy sank in the treacherous waters of a deep hole and residents of nearby summer homes rescued the girl and prevented her from returning to the deep waters.

The boy was the son of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Sanderson, Route 1, Vancouver.

Bus Mishap During Storm Injures Two Passengers

VANCOUVER, Wash., July 8.—(AP)—A loaded southbound North Coast Lines bus went out of control this morning to smash through light poles and a fire hydrant and land on a church lawn, injuring two passengers.

The accident occurred at 28th and Main streets during a heavy downpour.

Famine, Poverty, With Their Attendant Disease, Familiar To Two-Thirds of the World

By ALEXANDER R. GEORGE

WASHINGTON—For many millions of people in Asia and Europe, the present famine is a familiar hunger in sharper form. The Food and Agricultural Organization of the United Nations (FAO) estimates that two-thirds of the world's population of 2,200,000,000 were in a state of chronic undernourishment and poverty before the war.

Even in so-called normal years, innumerable thousands died directly from lack of food or as a result of extreme hunger which left them too weakened to resist disease or cold.

FAO officials say complete knowledge of worldwide nutrition conditions is lacking, but that it is evident three-fourths of the people in Asia and the tropics always live on diets far below what is needed for good health.

In central and eastern Europe too there has been extensive malnutrition for many years, contributing to high death and disability rates.

In Western Europe, too. Even in western Europe, 20 to 30 per cent of the population were malnourished according to available pre-war evidence.

In food-rich United States during the depression '30s a third of the people were said by nutritionists to have diets below modern standards of good health.

Agricultural experts figure that it will take Europe from five to seven years to restore its food production to pre-war levels. They point out, however, that Europe's pressing need for food imports may subside considerably within two or three years. Steps then will be necessary to increase the purchasing power of importing countries in order to keep international trade in agricultural products at high levels.

Surpluses Worry Us. Surpluses were the big bugaboo of farmers in the United States and other leading agricultural countries during the depression period. Many farmers fear that continued high production of such products as wheat, sugar and cotton will again bring about a disastrous situation. It is only generally recognized that these huge surpluses were surplus only in relation to buying power and not in relation to the needs of human beings. Although farm products rotted for lack of markets, large numbers of families even in the surplus-producing countries lacked food they needed for health.

When the current famine crisis is ended a big problem of the FAO will be to encourage expanding production without creating ruinous surpluses. FAO officials say it will be necessary for nations to act together.

Seek Foreign Development. The FAO believes that a primary need will be development of the less advanced countries such as China and India. The FAO program will not attempt to reach the millennium. Very simple beginnings are planned. A steel hoe, for instance, can make a lot of difference to a man who has never had one.

Many young people in the less fortunate countries will be sent abroad for training. Many million more acres of land could be irrigated in China, India, South America, Africa and the Middle East. Agricultural engineers say the high cost could pay large dividends in the opportunity for many people to make a better livelihood.

Some countries may be able to build up their livestock or dairy production. Parts of southern China are said to be well adapted to a considerable livestock development.

Lost Airplane's Fragments Found

SEATTLE, July 8.—(AP)—The finding of bits of wreckage of a twin-engine plane which vanished April 26 with six persons aboard spurred renewed search today high in the Cascade Mountains east of here.

Torn pieces of airplane fabric and wing structure, bearing partial license numbers, found yesterday were definitely identified as having come from a light transport which disappeared after taking off from Seattle.

No bodies were found, nor was the major portion of the wreckage. Identification of the scattered debris was made by James Dunnam, manager of the craft's home airport here.

The plane was making a charter flight east, piloted by Leif Buschmann, Jr., 22. The co-pilot was Walter Green, 28. Passengers were David Higby, Eastherville, Iowa; Mark S. Barrick, Youngstown, Ohio; Joseph E. Spedel, North Olmstead, Ohio, and Robert Benso, Mutchen, N. J.

The clue that led to the identification yesterday came from three fishermen who found fragments of wreckage while moving along a mountain trail.

O. W. Huebner Rites to Occur at Eagle Point

Services for Otto William Huebner, of Eagle Point who died at a local hospital Friday, will be held at the graveside in Siskiyow Memorial Park at 1:30 P. M. today, with the Rev. Harry Youn officiating.

Mr. Huebner is survived by his widow, Mrs. Tillie Huebner, and three sons, Herman, Henry and Marion, all of Eagle Point. He also leaves two daughters, Mrs. Harold Miller, Fresno, Calif., and Mrs. Lucille Paul, Mohler, Ore. He has one brother, Carl, Eagle Point, and three grandchildren, Murial, Patricia and James Miller, Fresno, Calif.

Mr. Huebner was a former resident of Roseburg going to the Eagle Point district about two years ago.

Funeral arrangements are in charge of Conger-Morris Funeral Parlors.

Business Executive Ends His Life With Rifle

PORTLAND, July 8.—(AP)—Hobart M. Bird, 51, who held the Distinguished Service Cross for World War I service and rose from a laborer to president of Columbia Steel Casting Inc., was found dead at his home here Saturday.

The coroner's office reported relatives said over-work since January, when Bird returned to his desk from retirement to save the business he built from voluntary liquidation, had led to a nervous collapse.

A .30 caliber rifle with which the coroner's office reported the industrialist took his own life was found near the body in the basement.

His widow, and one son, Hobart M., in the Philippine Islands, survive.

Tombstone's Courthouse, of Bloody Era Fame, to Become Resort for Health-Seekers

By MURRAY SINCLAIR AP Newsfeatures.

TOMBSTONE, Ariz.—It served its purpose during the desperate days of two-gun killers and steely-nerved law officers; now the old courthouse in this town that was too tough to die has been sold to private owners.

Corridors where once strode stage coach bandits, cattle rustlers and ruthless killers, now echo the carpenter's hammers as one of the southwest's most historic buildings is being transformed into a hotel.

Rooms in which were enacted dramatic life-and-death court battles when Tombstone first gave birth to law and order are being renovated to house a great influx of health-seekers.

It is a courthouse no longer, but all the bloody feuds and bizarre executions which took place in its shadow are being absorbed into the folklore of the west, never to be forgotten.

New Bloom for Tombstone. For a decade Tombstone, which sank into being almost overnight when Ed Schieffelin discovered silver in 1877, housed more real triggermen than any place in the nation. Now it is being reborn as a health center. And, Tombstone, once rated as important a city as San Francisco, is having a phenomenal boom.

In the past eight months its population has more than doubled. Even with trailer court deterring the outsiders there is a serious housing shortage being carried into the torrid summer months.

When Tombstone's city fathers sold the courthouse, they also sold their one and only jail. Now the place that was once the "toughest town on earth" is jailless. "We don't need one," says Mayor John P. Geacom.
