In the Day's News: (Continued from page 1) SEEKING POWER. WHEN you feel like praying, you might try this one: "Dear God, give us wise and unselfish leaders."

A great deal of the GOOD America has accomplished in the world can be laid at the door of Washington's wise and unselfish leadership in the critical hours of our nation's birth.

At his latest press conference, President Truman rules out for this year at least the prospect of a billion-dollar loan to Russia. He tells a questioner that he has no intention of asking congress at this session for more funds for foreign financing.

ON the troubled foreign front, Premier Alcide de Gasperi expresses disappointment in "American promises," saying in Rome that he fears the new Italian republic will fall if Trieste is internationalized as recommended by the four-power foreign ministers council.

ITALY has been unbelievably dumb. Twice in a row she has waded into war with the wrong crowd. That is the REAL reason for her troubles.

De Gasperi is merely trying to lay the blame on somebody else—which is a very common human failing. Italy's griefs track straight back to POOR LEADERSHIP—which the Italians tamely stood for.

WHEN an individual makes promises that he knows he probably won't be able to make good on, when IN A PINCH he talks high idealism that he later forgets, he is pretty sure to forfeit confidence.

Half of Northwest's Woods Fires Man-Caused: PORTLAND, Ore., July 20.—(AP)—Almost half of the 190 fires which have burned this season in Oregon and Washington national forests have been man-caused, Assistant Regional Forester John C. Kuhns said.

FOREST MANAGEMENT PLANS

By CHARLES V. STANTON

The U. S. Forest Service in its plan for management of its resources on the Umpqua National Forest is attempting to evolve a program which will be of great importance to the lumber industry as well as to the dependent communities.

The program of the Forest Service is particularly applicable to the Umpqua Forest, where the industry is just getting a good foothold, but is less adaptable to areas where a large portion of the privately owned timber has been removed.

The plan, as explained by Mr. Lindh, is that timber allocations be made to operators in such manner that winter operations will be confined to low lands while summer cutting shall be conducted exclusively at higher elevations.

The proposed method will be made possible by the program of access roads, which will open up vast bodies of forest service timber to managed, sustained-yield cutting—areas now inaccessible.

By having available substantial quantities of valley timber lands, largely privately owned, which can be coordinated in a cutting program with publicly owned timber, this program, heretofore impossible because of lack of access to national forest timber resources, can be efficiently conducted, Lindh believes.

As Douglas County's timber resources have barely been tapped to date, the proposed plan is particularly suited for this area, he declares. If access roads can be built promptly and high elevation cutting units blocked off for coordination with lower areas, an efficient operation can be assured.

Less fortunate are areas where the "face" timber—wooded lands on the valley floor or low foothills—already has been removed. A picture of this type was recently portrayed in a Saturday Evening Post article by Robert Ormand Case, "Why You Can't Buy a Home," in which the author told of idle mills in the Portland area within a few miles of national forest timber, untouched because of the lack of access roads.

But by cutting "face" timber in the winter months and high timber in the summer, logging crews can be kept employed throughout the entire year, except for extremely wet days, instead of being engaged only in seasonal operation as at present, with many weeks of enforced idleness. This system would insure steady income to workers and communities and, at the same time would promote better timber management, particularly as a network of access roads would permit early removal of decadent and overripe timber in time to save its commercial value.

Here in Douglas County we have often lamented our isolation and delayed industrial expansion. But the fact that development of our timber industry has been postponed until the introduction of such new ideas as sustained yield, cooperative management, wood waste utilization, new manufacturing processes, etc., all of which combine to produce a perpetual and stable industry, rather than an itinerant, seasonal operation, may prove after all, to be a blessing in disguise.

Legion Juniors of Roseburg to Battle Springfield Nine

The local Junior American Legionnaires will get a chance to show their power for next week's district playoffs Sunday at 2:30 P. M., at Finlay Field, when they run against the Springfield Legion nine, who are leaders in their district.

A non-league affair, tomorrow's contest will be a determining test of the right combination of Coach Mel Ingram, as the locals prepare to meet Klamath Falls in a three-game series for the Southern Oregon District playoffs next week.

Kelly, pitching ace drawn by the locals from the Oakland Legion nine, will start at the mound with the regulars, Roseburg and Myrtle Creek representatives making up the support. Kelly beat the local aggregation, 4-5, previous to Oakland's conceding the county championship to the locals. His hurling average per game has been 13 to 14 strikeouts per game.

The Roseburg lineup, as announced by Ingram, is: Kelly, p; Marsters, c; Richardson, 1b; Pope, 2b; Evans, 3b; Davenson, ss; Weaver, cf; Clayton, lf; Redding, if.

Coach Ingram reports the boys have slowly transformed from the early season class of a fielding club to a peppy hitting and fielding club, potentially capable of good showings against any competition within their class.

Title-Aspiring Youth On Mat Card Tonight: Three well-known wrestlers and one highly-touted newcomer will vie at the Roseburg Armory tonight in Matchmaker Don Owen's weekly mat show.

A three-round boxing exhibition opens the program at 8:30 P. M. Tex Hager, will meet Georges Dusette, coast junior heavyweight champion, in a non-title match. The other half of the double main-event will match Mike Nazarian, villainous Armenian, against Jack Pinto, 19-year-old California sensation. Jack is the son of Stanley Pinto, former grappling great who is "rooming his son for a world mat title in the next couple of years. Despite
