

Fewer Job Opportunities Offered Nation's Youth Not Having High School Diplomas

By JANE EADS

WASHINGTON—Katharine F. Lenroot, chief of the Children's Bureau, warns that we are confronted with the possibility of idleness among the nation's youth.

She says thousands of youngsters in the 14-to-17-year-old group are neither in school, where most of them should be, nor regularly employed. Information brought in from many parts of the country by the bureau's staff indicates fewer employment opportunities are open to young workers today.

Diploma Regains Value
Miss Lenroot says there is no evidence that we have made appreciable headway in regaining ground lost during the war, when high school enrollment dropped a million.

She cites some trends in the youth employment situation, which she says "bears watching, for it has many dangerous potentialities."

Trends are:
1. Young veterans generally are given preference for the better jobs—jobs with a future.
2. The high school diploma is regaining its prewar value as a job qualification. Employers once more can find high school graduates for many jobs.

3. Many employers of their own accord are raising age requirements. Those who took on 16 and 17-year-olds during the war seem now to prefer 18-year-olds. They say these are "steadier."

4. Part-time employment possibilities for in-school youth are shrinking. Employers want full-time workers and can get them.

Fodder for Dictators
"The promise of the future must be kept open to this country's youth," says Miss Lenroot. "and we must never again close doors to them as was done in the depression years."

"If we do, they will look for a solution elsewhere, and we cannot be reminded too often that both Hitler and Mussolini gathered their first strength from the disillusioned and disinherited youth of their respective countries, from those who saw no acceptable future for themselves in the existing order."

Harry Williams Winner Of Golf Handicap Event
