Pheasant Hunting Prospects Poor

Open season for pheasant hunting, which opened yesterday, October 19, will be very poor in Douglas County, Game Warden Fred Perry predicted Saturday. There just aren't many birds in this area this season, he added.

Other counties of southwestern Oregon with open season, October 19 through October 27, include Coos, Josephine and Jackson. Hunters in southern and eastern Oregon must get their metal tags from state police patrol officers in their particular hunting areas.

Bag limit for 1946, according to the Oregon State Game Commission, is three cock pheasants a day but not more than six in possession at any one time.

Perry stated that it is a violation to possess or transport any upland game birds in any area in which there is a closed season or a lesser bag limit unless the birds are properly tagged in the areas in which they are taken.
