CONSERVATION ADVANCED

By CHARLES V. STANTON

Passage of the Coastal Streams Fishing bill by a ratio of approximately 2 to 1 in the State of Oregon places responsibility upon conservation forces to work cooperatively with commercial interests in a program designed to increase fish life in the state's coastal waters.

Giant strides have been made in recent years in Oregon's program of fish and wildlife conservation. Both the Game and Fish Commissions have been completely reorganized.

In previous years we have had a continuing war between commercial fishermen and the so-called sportsmen's groups. Bill 312 was the outgrowth of the first cooperative effort between those two factions, and the success achieved in Tuesday's election indicates that a far better method than open warfare has been developed.

"We have been making a mistake all these years in fighting the fishermen," Smith said in commenting on the election results. "The fishermen and the sportsmen have their interest in common. Both want more fish. We can attain our goal in the future by working in harmony rather than at odds."

We believe this plan to be most desirable and capable of producing best results. As long as our Fish and Game Commissions are seriously minded on the subject of conservation, we believe they should be given all possible cooperation.

Conservationists in past years have concentrated their efforts upon better regulation of net fishing. Over-fishing by commercial interests has been one of the principal influences in reducing fish life. But operation of the law made effective at Tuesday's election will remove many of the most undesirable features of commercial fishing practices.

Many factors, other than over-fishing, combine to reduce the quantity of fish life. Pollution is one of the most serious of these destructive factors. Another is found in logging practices which strip forest cover, permitting heavy washing of spawning beds, and depositing ashes from slashing fires into the streams to change chemical content, leaving obstructions in small tributaries to halt fish from reaching spawning beds, and numerous other faults.

Undoubtedly sports and commercial fishermen, if brought together for serious discussion of these various problems, can be united in an effort to promote better conservation. One major objective has been achieved. The next is to apply a scientific approach to the problem. The two state commissions are now engaged in scientific studies which are developing a fund of knowledge concerning fish habits, water conditions, and other data upon which improved management can be based.

When the regular weekly cabinet meeting convened, President Truman was confronted with the problem of running a government in which the political opposition makes the rules and holds the purse strings.

The new secretary of commerce, W. Averell Harriman, bridled when one reporter asked him if there were any cabinet resignations at the meeting.

Editorial Views On Election Vary Widely in Nation

(By the Associated Press) Editorial reaction across the nation varied widely and sharply on the election results and the suggestion of Senator Fulbright (D-Ark.) that President Truman appoint a Republican secretary of state and then resign in his favor.

The sweeping Republican election victories were viewed by editors variously as "a protest against bureaucracy" and was "a vote of no-confidence in the Truman administration."

Some papers favored the resignation suggestion, others criticized it as impractical under the American system.

The Chicago Tribune hailed the election results as the greatest victory for "the people" since Appomattox.

But the Chicago Sun, which generally supported Democratic candidates, said: "For the Democratic party the lesson of the election is clear. When voters want 'normalcy' and a conservative, backward march, they will turn to the party which is expert in these moves. That is the GOP."

"The nation can look forward now to a sharpening of controls over government instead of control over people," commented the Minneapolis Tribune.

The Atlanta Constitution in the Democratic South, said the immediate result of the elections "means without question the breaking up of the Democratic party."

The New York Times said "what is urgently needed is prompt recognition, both by the President and by the Republican leaders, of the real risks inherent in an interregnum in which authority is divided between an executive and a Congress of different political loyalties."

"Only confusion at home, and a weakening of American influence abroad, can result from an attempt on either side to exploit this divided authority for partisan advantage."

On the resignation issue, the New York newspaper PM, owned by Marshall Field, printed the "open letter to the President" by Field which previously appeared in the Chicago Sun. The letter urged the President to step aside in favor of a GOP secretary of state.

But PM, in an editorial signed by Max Lerner, termed Tuesday's election result "a congressional and not an executive mandate" and said that "for the President to turn a congressional election result into a change of executive power would defeat, rather than further, the democratic principle."

The PM editorial added: "The Republican majority may try to put through dangerous anti-labor legislation, reckless suppressions of civil liberties, destructive changes in the control of industry. Is it wisdom to remove a president who alone can hold up such measures by a veto and widespread public debate on them?"

However, the New York World Telegram said of the proposal: "That would give the Republicans complete authority as well as complete responsibility and it is not an illogical idea."

The New York Sun termed the proposal "fantastic" and said it was "not worthy of prolonged discussion."

The news of Charlotte, N. C., commented: "Senator Fulbright promises to introduce in the 80th Congress a constitutional amendment authorizing the Congress to call a presidential election if the opposition party manages to take over the legislative branch in mid-term."

"This seems to us a wise and necessary piece of legislation and it would become both the victorious Republicans and the dragged Democrats to support it without reservation."

War Vets in Saddle

RENO, Ore., Nov. 8.—(AP)—War veterans are going to have plenty to say in this city.

NEW TYPE PLANE Exhibited Here

Delivery at the Roseburg airport Sunday of a new Stinson Flying Station Wagon, a newly developed personal plane, was reported today by M. B. Emmitt of the Roseburg Skyways, Inc., local distributors.

The plane is a 4-place ship which can be changed in about five minutes to a cargo carrier. It is especially designed, Emmitt reports, for flying farmers, ranchers, sportsmen, business men, salesmen and charter operators.

It is a high-wing monoplane designed to fly gross weights of 2230 pounds, with a useful load of 1044 pounds. It is powered by a 6-cylinder, 150 H. P. engine, with a cruising range of 500 miles and normal cruising speed of 125 M. P. H. It has a sound-proofed, air conditioned cabin.

The newly designed plane delivered here Sunday, Emmitt said, is for display purposes. Customer deliveries are scheduled for early spring.

The last lap is the hardest!

You've probably figured your present car won't have to last much longer. We hope you're right. For our part, we're doing our best to get those grand new Packards to our customers.

You know the situation But, like every other motor car manufacturer, Packard is still struggling with parts and materials shortages. This year, the industry as a whole has been able to build only 44% of its output for the same period in 1941. Packard has done better than that, but we'd like to put in a word of caution: It may be some time yet before you get behind the wheel of your new car.

Don't take a chance! Make sure your present car keeps rolling. Test your car with this easy quiz. If you find any of these symptoms, bring your car in for a quick check-up. Lots of cars are lasting longer and running better because our expert mechanics are trained to nip trouble before it takes hold!

WINTERIZE NOW! These days, it's doubly important to beat winter to the punch. Bring your car in early for a thorough check-up of your battery, electrical system, and cooling system—as well as pre-winter lubrication and engine tune-up. The last-minute rush will be terrific—and the first cold snap may damage hard-to-get parts!

P.S. Fenders, doors, running boards—in fact, all body parts are scarce. Don't let rust eat them away. Our protective treatment will add to your car's life, appearance and value.
