

Commission On Children Readies 2-Year Program

By JANE EADS

WASHINGTON — A prospectus for youth has been completed by the National Commission on Children and Youth, considered one of the most important groups in the country concerned with our boys and girls.

What the commission calls its "Action Program for 1947 and 1948" emphasizes 11 points for developing and bettering the status of the nation's young folks.

The purpose of the commission, set up pursuant to a recommendation of the National Commission on Children in Wartime, is:

"To raise the levels of health, education and welfare of the children of the nation so that they may have full opportunity to develop their potentialities and to become responsible and cooperative members of society."

"To this end, to arouse all citizens to cooperative action in support of the public and private services needed to realize this objective."

"To work for the accomplishment of the objectives outlined in building the future for children and youth."

Two-Way Aid Sought
In considering the 11-point program, Miss Katherine Lenroot, chief of the U. S. Children's Bureau, who appointed the executive committee of the new commission, believes federal and state aid to education one of the main points.

The commission aims to "press" for federal and state financial aid to public education that will make fully available educational opportunity for all children from nursery school through high school.

The commission says it wants to "insure for all youth, regardless of their economic status, full access to advanced liberal, technical and professional education, in accordance with their interest and capacities."

The commission urges legislation that makes possible achievement of a comprehensive program of child welfare services, within broad programs of public welfare, available in every state.

Further, it seeks better protection of the rights and welfare of children and youth through state legislation, such as laws relating to adoption, guardianship, illegitimacy, juvenile delinquency and other aspects of child welfare.

The commission's proposed action program also calls for: Expansion of federal and state cooperative programs for maternal and child health, expansion of mental health and guidance programs for children, expansion of social security programs affecting family income; Also recreational opportunity.

Montgomery In Russia for Task Of Pacification

By J. M. ROBERTS, Jr.

AP Foreign Affairs Analyst
Britain's acrid little Field Marshal Montgomery, whose name is more synonymous with massed artillery than with the soothing word, is now revealed as Britain's newest envoy of pacification.

Word from Moscow has it that the marshal is there to convince the Russians that everything is on the up and up about the Anglo-American arms standardization deal, and that his trip is viewed as the most important mission to Moscow by a Britisher in some time.

His assignment would seem like a big order. The Russians have displayed considerable nervousness over the proposals. They ask themselves just who in the world besides Russia is so big that the British and Americans need to combine against them. They are looking at the other side of a picture which Americans see as a mere commonplace application of lessons learned since 1939, when American industry began making weapons to French and British specifications, and then had to shift to American types.

Canada Involved
The Russians, too, are well aware of an angle of the standardization program which has to do with something besides the long-term possibility that British and American forces may have to fight again under unified command. The United States wants to build its own military bases in far northern Canada. The deal hasn't gone through because some Canadians see the project as a further binding of Canada to the U. S. and a corollary weakening of ties with England.

Prime Minister King will be in a lot better position to convince his people if the whole thing becomes one big pool with Britain throwing in too. From this side, those bases in Canada merely look like insurance taken out in the devout hope that there will be no fire.

From the Russian side they look like they would from Buffalo and Detroit if Britain were to start such construction in southern Canada.

Monty's Task Theorized
Montgomery's job, apparently, is to tell the Russians not to get excited; that standardization is merely something that looks sensible from our standpoint in an unsettled world; that the door is open for Russian participation in any deal Britain makes with the U. S.; that its just like Russia wanting to cement a defense ring with the weak countries which surround her.

The ordinary diplomatic smoothie, subject to the inherent Russian distrust of foreigners, probably wouldn't have a chance of putting the idea over.

Improved child labor legislation, employment opportunities, state and community planning for children and youth, youth participation in the planning and development of community services and the international programs.

The latter is suggested to encourage, through the United Nations and other appropriate organizations, international action that will strengthen services for children and youth.

Recommendations of the commission are already being considered, and in many instances adopted by other groups throughout the nation.

Chairman of the commission is Leonard W. Mayo, Cleveland, president of the Child Welfare League of America and dean of the School of Applied Social Sciences, Western Reserve Academy.
