up like this and pulls out to pass. Far too often, the traffic figures disclose, he winds up dead.

THE slower-moving traffic on hills and curves is apt to consist largely of trucks. Much as the trucks may annoy us when we are in a hurry to get somewhere, we have to admit that the country simply couldn't get along without them.

Another problem of the future (not so much a highway problem as a city street problem) is where are we going to park our cars? Especially in the business districts of our towns and our cities.

Already parking places are practically non-existent in congested areas everywhere. In the old days, you could run into a parking lot or garage if you could endure the pain of punting up. Now, in the larger cities invariably and in the smaller ones frequently, these places are filled up.

THIS much is becoming evident: If people can't find a place to park their cars in the older, established business districts, they will roll on out to the outskirts and do their shopping there, where parking space is available.

There is another word associative with harvest. It is the word "glean." Gleaning involves the collecting or gathering of materials left by the harvester. We hope that this word "glean" soon may follow in our thinking and activity the thought and practice of "harvesting of timber for commercial purposes."

AFTER THE HARVEST

An interesting indication in the trend of attitude toward our timber resources is found in the phrasing of bills for new forestry legislation introduced at the current session of the legislature. In past sessions, regulations have been directed toward persons engaged in "logging and woodcutting." But the several new bills refer to persons "harvesting timber for commercial purposes."

That word "harvesting" has an important meaning. Its use in legislation indicates that we are thinking in terms of a perpetual crop. It fits into the new trend toward "tree farming," a practice being adopted by more and more of the larger timber operators. It reverses the process of "cut and move on" which has been the practice of the timber industry as it has left its path of destruction and desolation across the continent.

It also is indicative of our thinking with regard to new uses for forest products. In past years we have thought of our trees as raw material for structural timbers, boards and other lumber products.

We are beginning to realize, however, that many other values are to be found in the wood from our forests. We can manufacture industrial alcohol from wood. We can derive protein feeds for livestock and poultry from our forests. Our trees yield commercially important chemicals and adhesives. Our clothing and milady's stockings can be produced from wood.

Hundreds of new uses for wood are being studied. Some operations will provide far more profit than is to be derived from the logging and sawmilling practices upon which we have leaned for so many years.

Studies show that our present usage utilizes only a fraction of the potential worth of a tree felled in the forest. Only the main trunk, from which top and branches have been trimmed, is brought to the mill. The mill, in turn, strips off and discards slabs and imperfect sections, wasting a large percentage in sawdust and chips. When the timber or board reaches the carpenter, he too, must discard certain portions. Thus the material which actually goes into a construction job represents only about 15 per cent of the tree as it stood in the forest.

But there are many uses to which those branches, tops, bark, etc., discarded in the logging woods could be used. The waste from mills can be converted into numerous products. The difficulty is to find usages which make it economically practical to collect, transport and use the waste. We are making headway on this problem. When it is solved, we will find that the material we have been wasting will perhaps furnish larger and more substantial industrial payrolls than obtained from the lesser portion of the tree now being utilized.

Our progress along this path is recognized in the wording of proposed new legislation in which our trees are considered a crop to be harvested rather than stripped from the land. The proposed new legislation would provide better forest management, would give better control by state authorities, would restrict wasteful cutting of reproduction growth, would require logging operators to leave clean woods behind them, as well as providing sufficient seed trees to adequately restock logged over areas.

There is another word associative with harvest. It is the word "glean." Gleaning involves the collecting or gathering of materials left by the harvester. We hope that this word "glean" soon may follow in our thinking and activity the thought and practice of "harvesting of timber for commercial purposes."

Willamette Basin Group Rapped By Astoria Senator

SALEM, Ore., Jan. 24.—Sen. Merle Chessman, Astoria, has declared war on the Willamette Valley Basin Commission, forming it "a glorified Chamber of Commerce."

Speaking on a bill to relieve the state postway development director from having to serve as Willamette Basin Commission secretary, Chessman said he will demand that the commission be eliminated.

"I challenge this whole act," Chessman said. "It is a concept of functions which do not belong to the state government any more than to any chamber of commerce."

The Inland Waterways Association, which is interested in billions of dollars worth of projects, spends its own money, and never has received a cent from the state.

"I will demand that when the commission's appropriation is brought to the floor of the Senate, it be brought in as a separate bill so we can fight it."

The bill in question was passed and sent to the House, with Chessman, Thomas R. Mahoney, Portland, and Senate President Marshall E. Cornett, Klamath Falls, voting against it.

The budget provides for $18,125 for the commission for the next two years.

Chessman also said he would demand that the commission be reorganized as the privately-sponsored Willamette Valley Project Association, as it was before the commission was created.

Adventist Church Growth in North Pacific Area Heavy

Elder J. J. Robertson of Roseburg is one of more than 200 official delegates from throughout the Northwest attending the quadrennial session of the North Pacific Union Conference of the Seventh-day Adventists Church, which now has a membership of 28,000 in the area.

Elder V. G. Anderson, president of the union, which embraces Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana and Alaska, cited the growth of Adventists in this area, in his opening address, as "phenomenal."

He listed as a "miracle of missions," not only the donations received, but the missionaries sent overseas, who numbered 38 in the past year. Rehabilitation offerings were $236,229 and income funds reached the $180,392 mark.

Regular funds turned in to the churches during the 1947 period amounted to $10,149,810. Tithes reached the $7,322,701 figure and mission offerings were $2,817,109.

The Adventists in the Northwest maintain many church grade schools, nine academies and a college. The college, located at Walla Walla, Wash., has an enrollment this year of more than 1,100 students.

Grade schools include the Roseburg Junior Academy on Military St. and Sutherland Academy.

Elder Anderson reported that "spiritual growth is in evidence, keeping pace with the growth in membership."

Officers will be elected and other church business completed before the session closes, Jan. 27.

Methodist Choir To Offer Program Of Sacred Music

An evening of sacred music in the form of a music festival presented by the choir and music department of First Methodist Church Sunday evening at 7:30 was announced this morning by the Rev. W. A. MacArthur, pastor.

For more than a year, it has been the custom of this choral group to present monthly, an evening of great, sacred music. A good deal of the enthusiasm shown in the attendance at these evening concerts has been due to the varied program presented, Rev. Mr. MacArthur said.

While the choir sponsors the concert and does considerable singing, yet many other numbers such as duets, solos and quartets are always included.

At the coming concert, a duet by Mrs. A. J. Ellison and Herschel Scott, a women's trio with Mrs. H. Pattison, Mrs. Geo. Churchill, and Mrs. Paul Geddes, a soprano solo by Miss Marilyn Feller, and two organ solos by Mrs. Gordon Stewart will be presented.

A complete program for the evening includes: Prelude—"Pavane" Ravel, "Vesper Hymn" Choir, "Trust in the Lord" Handel, "The Lord Is My Shepherd" J. Warhurst, Herschel Scott, and Mrs. A. J. Ellison, Organ Solo, "Nocturne" Grieg, Mrs. Gordon Stewart, "Now Let Heaven and Earth Adore Thee" Bach, "Jesus, Joy of Man's Desiring" Bach, "Soft Were Thy Hands, Dear Jesus" O'Hara, Mrs. H. Pattison, Mrs. Geo. Churchill, and Mrs. Paul Geddes, Trio—"This Holy Hour" Nevin, Mrs. H. Pattison, Mrs. Geo.
