should see his "diapers" next morning! They're a mess.
"I'm doing everything I know to train him, but I don't seem to be getting anywhere."
The others do what they can to console her; as is the way of women in such experience meetings. "Oh, he'll be all right," one assures her warmly. "My Elbert was the same way. I'd practically break out crying every morning when I went in to take him up. But just all of a sudden he quit."
THESE tourists of our gasoline-gadget age are nearly two centuries in time from the early inhabitants of this ancient and lovely mission, but they speak of immemorial things—of routes of travel and of children.
We may be reasonably positive that when the people of that earlier day—Indians, priests and Spanish laymen alike—gathered within the mission walls and the sexes split apart into groups, as men and women will, the males spoke of the trails through the hills by which they had come and the females chattered like sparrows about their young, and their habits, good and bad, and what it is best to do about such things. And possibly, again as women will, they tossed in a few pearls of wisdom on the timeless general subject of handling husbands.

THE material aspects of the thing we call civilization change from age to age, but people themselves, in their inner and fundamental interests and instincts, change very little indeed. And what change there may be is more a matter of externals than of that which lies deep down under the skin in all of us.

AND so it is with another fundamental—that law of nature which decrees that what man HAS must vary according to the diligence and the intelligence with which he works and produces.

Before the coming of the mission fathers, these California Indians worked very little, if at all. They HAD very little. The padres taught them habits of industry and of thrift, and for half a century, while the missions flourished, they HAD MORE. Then the mission civilization decayed and the Indians took to the hills again and went hungry again.

There is now this amazing land of modern Southern California, where there is apparently everything for everybody, enough for all who come.

BUT mark this, and mark it well:

If the time should come when men and women NO LONGER WORK AND PRODUCE this Southern California miracle land will slip back into the dust and the nothingness that was here when the mission padres came.

What isn't produced, can't be divided. There can be no production without work.

THE UMPQUA BILL

Protection for the Umpqua River from further depletion of salmon runs would be provided by a bill introduced into the Oregon legislature Tuesday by Senator Thomas Parkinson. The measure is sponsored jointly by Representatives Hill and Gile.

It would limit commercial fishing to shad, striped bass, perch, flounder, etc., during the months of May and June, prohibiting net fishing for salmon throughout other months of the year. The shad run occurs almost exclusively in May and June.

The measure is designed to provide protection while scientific studies are continued on the Umpqua River by the Fish and Game Commission's experts, as a five-year survey will be necessary, covering a full cycle of spring Chinook salmon, before final conclusions regarding river management are possible.

The ban against salmon fishing would not materially affect the commercial fishing industry on the Umpqua River as it probably would reduce total income by not to exceed 10 per cent.

The survey conducted during the past year reported the total wholesale value of the commercial catch on the Umpqua River in 1946 to be divided as follows:

|                      |           |
|----------------------|-----------|
| Salmon and steelhead | $120,000 |
| Shad and shad roe    | 515,000   |
| Striped bass         | 2,400     |
| Pilechards and crabs | 15,000    |
| Total                | $652,400 |

The shad take represented approximately 80 per cent of total wholesale value of the commercial landings.

The Fish Commission has proposed limitations on salmon fishing, eliminating spring Chinook and reducing seasons on summer and fall fishing, which would considerably lower the salmon take by netters. Thus, the bill introduced Tuesday would make only a very slight reduction from limitations already proposed.

The necessity for the bill lies in uncertainty of other legislation now pending. The Fish Commission has introduced an authority bill, Senate Bill 140, which would give it the power to regulate seasons, gear, deadlines, etc. This bill is meeting strenuous opposition from sports fishing interests because it would transfer regulation over salmon angling from the Game Commission to the Fish Commission. Furthermore, sports fishermen do not trust the Fish Commission, a suspicion well justified by the Commission's attempt through Senate Bill 244, to sneak through repeal of the Rogue River and Willamette Slough closures, and other laws now existing for the protection of the fishery resource.

The Fish Commission does not now have power to regulate all and rules as to seasons, gear, species, deadlines, etc., are fixed by legislative enactment.

It is very doubtful that the Fish Commission will be given the authority it seeks. We further doubt that, if granted the power to regulate, the Fish Commission would provide needed protection for Umpqua salmon runs. Its recent actions do not indicate sincerity on conservation.

The serious depletion of the river, as shown in the findings of biologists, requires drastic measures to protect salmon runs while further studies are made. This can only be achieved with full certainty through legislative enactment.

Sports fishing, on the other hand, can be regulated as need demands. The Game Commission has authority to open and close seasons, set bag limits and otherwise manage a river's resources. It is a similar type of authority that is sought by the Fish Commission—authority it should have if it demonstrated trustworthiness. But the Fish Commission's insistence that it be given control over salmon angling, its refusal to provide protection for steelheads, its sneak attack by subterfuge upon the Rogue River indicate that it is not to be trusted with the broad powers it seeks.

This, then, necessitates legislative action to provide protection for the Umpqua, as no reliance can be placed in sincerity of the Fish Commission.

The proposed bill by retaining for the commercial industry at least 80 per cent—more probably 90 per cent—of its take, while preserving regulation through the Game Commission over recreational fishing, would not materially damage the industry, but would provide full measure of protection.

It is most important, we believe, that this bill receive favorable action from the legislature.

Churchill, Bevin In Oral Duel Over Palestine Mess

LONDON, Feb. 19.—(AP)—Winston Churchill reproached Foreign Secretary Bevin yesterday for presenting the Palestine problem to the United Nations "with no solution to offer" and for maintaining in Palestine a "vast apparatus of protraction and delay."

Churchill addressed the House of Commons after Bevin said the United Nations appeal was necessary because Britain's League of Nations mandate proved unworkable, and the demands of Jews and Arabs "irreconcilable."

"The British government had, of themselves, no power under the terms of the League of Nations' mandate to award the country either to the Arabs or to the Jews—or even to partition it between them," Bevin said.

Bevin called the wartime prime minister's accusation "totally unjust," saying it would have been fatal for Britain to present the Palestine question to the U. N. without exhausting every other possibility of solution.

Churchill, who himself has urged that Bevin lay the Palestine problem "at the feet of the United Nations," demanded:

"Are we to understand that we are to go on the whole of this burden—with no solution to offer, no guidance to give? The whole of this burden of maintaining law and order in Palestine and carrying on administration?"

This "burden" will continue, Churchill said, "not only until September, when the United Nations are to have it laid before them, but until the United Nations have solved the problem, which the foreign secretary has declared himself, after 18 months of protracted delay, incapable of offering any solution to."

Facing Bevin across the floor, Churchill asked:

"If the policy is right today, why could it not have been announced 12 months ago?"

Bevin said he thought it would have been a "painful" policy for Britain—"with the leadership we have shown in the world"—to have gone to the United Nations without attempting to solve the problem herself.

S. R. O. Audience At Supreme Court Sees Dull Session

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19.—(AP)—There's no doubt about it. The Supreme Court just doesn't give a whoop about its audience.

Monday, for example, the justices had a fine chance to make their marble mansion a popular hangout. But they muffed it.

The 280 seats in the court are rarely filled. Monday all the seats were taken, and there was a line waiting outside.

These people had come to hear what the court had decided, if anything about the John L. Lewis case.

Well, it turned out the court hadn't decided anything on the miners and their $3,500,000 fine. But it did have a few legal odds and ends to dispose of.

Now, in view of this full house, did the justices unbend and pep things up a bit? Did they encourage the customers to come back?

They did not. They started out with Justice Frankfurter saying:

"Now this is very technical." And he was so right.

The decision had something to do with a man in Virginia who sued a man in North Carolina. Maybe it was vice versa.

Anyway, Frankfurter plowed bravely into the technicalities. But he barely had begun, when other justices started to smile, and Justice Jackson cleared his throat warningly.

Frankfurter stopped, peered at his notes, and then said cheerfully:

"Oh, yes. It was the other way around."

After the technicalities had been stacked in a neat but high pile, Justice Black made an effort to salvage a little for the non-legal minds in the audience.

He talked matter of factly of the perils of running a still in New Jersey. That's something anyone could understand—even if the case did hinge on the rather unusual contention that the man shouldn't have been convicted because he was only a trainee in the moonshine business.

But in a case involving railroad brakemen, Black jumped the easy-to-understand track.

There had been an argument over whether these brakemen should be paid while they learn to set brakes and throw switches. Black translated this into legal language and came up with:

"These men are taught to put their hands to various instrumentalities."

That statement is going to surprise a lot of brakemen.

That statement is going to surprise a lot of brakemen.

That statement is going to surprise a lot of brakemen.

That statement is going to surprise a lot of brakemen.

Leveled Lumber Prices Predicted

PORTLAND, Feb. 19.—(AP)—Lumber price fluctuations will level off in the next four to six months, Ray W. Bell, Spokane, president of the Western Retail Lumbermen's Association, said at a group's opening convention session yesterday.

He said that although retailers get the blame for industry-upsetting price shifts, manufacturers are in part at fault.

In the face of publicly announced hold-the-line policy on prices, there have been some "substantial" increases by manufacturers and the reasons given have been "many and conflicting and in some cases at variance with the facts," Bell asserted.

He added that the price fault is not one-sided and said "I do not know of a single yard that did not make a satisfactory profit last year."

W. C. Bell, Seattle, said too many "curbstones" market speculators have been active and said the associations' principal problem is to re-establish itself as the major building materials supplier.

Admission for Friday night's dancing is $1.50 per person, tax included.

'Pee Wee' Hunt, Orchestra Dated at Kennedy's Mill

Many of the hit records made by Glen Gray and his Casa Loma aggregation feature Pee Wee both as a trombone and vocal soloist.

Admission for Friday night's dancing is $1.50 per person, tax included.

Aged Bicyclist Killed By Truck; Sun Blamed

CORVALLIS, Ore., Feb. 19.—(AP)—Blinding sun rays were blamed for the instant death of Llewellyn F. Tidd, 75-year-old bicyclist, who was killed about 5 o'clock Monday afternoon four miles west of Corvallis on the Corvallis-Philomath highway.

Benton County Sheriff C. N. Lilly reported Howard J. Horner, Corvallis, driver of a truck which struck the man, said he was blinded by the setting sun and did not see the bicyclist at any time before the truck hit him.

The marriage of the 73-year-old widower and the 18-year-old girl is set for Saturday.

"UNBLOCK" your DIGESTIVE TRACT

And Stop Dosing Your Stomach With Soda and Alkalizers
Don't expect to get real relief from heartburn, sour stomach, gas and bad breath by taking soda and other alkalizers. It is the cause of your trouble. In this case, your real trouble is not in the stomach at all. But in the intestinal tract where half of your food is digested. And when the lower part gets blocked food may fail to digest properly.

What's more, a real relief is something to "unblock" your lower intestinal tract, something to clean it out effectively—help Nature's own digestive juices to mix better with your food. You get genuine relief from indigestion as you get it. You'll feel good, your appetite will be better, and your digestion will be better.

Get Carter's Pepsin now. Take as directed. They gently and effectively "unblock" your digestive tract. The result is all of Nature's own digestive juices to mix better with your food. You get genuine relief from indigestion as you get it. You'll feel good, your appetite will be better, and your digestion will be better.
