Religious Rift Again Stressed in Irish Dispute

BELFAST, Northern Ireland, March 13.—(AP)—Northern Ireland Protestants, using private funds privately administered, plan to extend to Londonderry City a 10-year-old campaign to keep land out of the hands of Roman Catholics.

An Ulster unionist party spokesman said this plan was a proposal referred to by Prime Minister Brooke in the Ulster parliament Tuesday during an exchange with Nationalist Member Edward McAteer.

"Any person, or body of persons, I think, are entitled to defend their own interests," Brooke said.

He added that the Protestant population of Eire (Southern Ireland) had decreased 40 per cent under "threats that any person who does not believe in the unity of Ireland should get out."

McAteer's Nationalist Party seeks union of Northern Ireland with predominantly Catholic Eire. Protestants declared that rich

Roman Catholic organizations were always in the market for Northern Ireland farm lands which subsequently were let to Catholic tenants, thereby increasing the Catholic vote in the community.

"It is all part of the campaign to drive the Protestants from Ulster," said the Rev. John G. MacManaway of Londonderry.

Catholics have not denied the existence of land purchase funds, but McAteer said they did consider Brooke's declaration yesterday showed discrimination.

"Such statements are not conducive to public order and peace between all sections of the community," he said.
