In the Day's News

EVERYBODY would have listened. HE spoke once, and only once, of his face-to-face talk with Stalin at the Kremlin a couple of weeks ago.

Stalin told him then, he reported, that the Big Four powers (U. S., Britain, Russia, France) might be able to compromise ALL their major differences "after they have EXHAUSTED THEMSELVES IN DISPUTE."

STALIN'S statement is EXTREMELY significant. IF we read carefully between the lines, it comes pretty close to providing an answer to the $64 question: "What is Russia up to?"

There is plenty of starvation in Europe now. There will be MORE starving people in Europe if the disagreement over what is to be done with Germany goes on to the point of "exhaustion."

WHENEVER Europe is nearly enough starved, when there is no longer any visible hope of anything better, Russia will no longer have to impose communism on Europe by FORCE.

SO, you see, it may be that what Russia is up to is WAITING and STALLING until chaos is complete, anticipating that when this moment arrives communism will sweep through Europe as a prairie fire sweeps through dry grass.

SECRETARY MARSHALL makes it plain that in his opinion we mustn't permit ourselves to be stalled until chaos has time to get here. He says: "I believe that action can not await compromise through exhaustion. Whatever action is necessary to meet these pressing problems must be taken without delay."

He adds: "The patient is sinking while the doctor's deliberate."

THERE is an interesting and highly significant minor development in the news of the week. President Truman signs a law suspending until March 31, 1949, the present four-cents-per-pound import duty on COPPER.

Copper is one of the things we have always had plenty of. There have been times in the past when it almost seemed we had too much of it.

THE statisticians tell us that in the future we must look increasingly to other countries for OIL. Research scientists are working on processes to make oil out of coal. They know how already. What they are after is a cheaper way to do it.

The period in our history that created oil barons and timber barons and steel and copper principalities and that made lucky prospectors nigger-rich overnight is slowly passing.

OAKLAND'S HERITAGE

By CHARLES V. STANTON

The 100th anniversary of the first immigrant cabin to be erected in the Oakland vicinity is to be celebrated at Oakland May 3 and 4.

Every section of Douglas County is rich in pioneer lore. Each settlement has a background of early-day experience in which hardship and suffering are closely related to happiness and deep satisfaction in creation of homes from a fertile wilderness. Celebrations, such as the one planned at Oakland, have special significance in the fact that they serve to inform newcomers and the younger generation of historical facts, building greater appreciation of the heritage of pioneer spirit and industry which carved dwelling places for those of us who have been so richly endowed because of the fortitude and determination of our pioneers.

Back in 1843 the Applegates began searching for a new route through Southern Oregon, and three years later an immigrant train rolled over the difficult trail bound for the Willamette Valley. But, from time to time, members of the party, finding likely homesteads, dropped out to build cabins and start life in the new surroundings.

Gradually more and more people came to the pleasant settlement, which became known by the name of Underwood. Among the settlers was Alonzo F. Brown, who left his home in Stratford, N. H., at the age of 14 years to make his own way. He had been quite successful in business and in 1859 crossed the plains to Oregon. He led an adventurous life for several years, particularly while operating pack trains and general merchandise stores in Eastern Oregon and Idaho during the gold rush days from 1861 to 1865.

Brown donated a depot and warehouse site to the O. & C., and offered free sites to the business men of Oakland if they would move to the new town. Gradually New Oakland absorbed businesses from Old Oakland, and residents followed to the new location.

Roseburg's police blossomed in new, blue, summer uniform shirts and caps today, which they will wear as long as the hot weather lasts, Chief of Police O. A. Kennerly said.

Chief Kennerly said. Mayor and Mrs. Albert G. Flegel will lead the grand march at the ball. Members of the City Council, other civic dignitaries, and members of the police force will follow behind the mayor and his lady.

Population, Wages on Farms Show Increase

A few more people on farms, getting higher wages, was the farm-labor picture as of April 1. By regions, increases in wages ranged from 7 to 11 per cent, except in the Pacific Coast states where the average increase was 5 per cent. Nationally, average wage rates this year amounted to almost four times the 1910-14 "parity" period. About 9,242,000 people were at work on the nation's farms, including 7,571,000 family workers and 1,671,000 hired workers. Both groups were slightly larger than a year ago.
