

Comparison of Youths Gives 4-H Outstanding Nod

By PETER EDSON
NEA Washington Correspondent
WASHINGTON, D. C. — The capital has just been treated to visits from a couple of youth delegations with a capital Y. The difference between capital Y Youth and small y youth is more than you'd think. Small y youth comes here in a bus to take snapshots of itself on the Capitol steps, gawk through the White House, take in the other sights, buy a few soft drinks and hamburgers, pair off for daylight handholding, then get in the bus and go back where they came from. It's fun. Capital Y Youth, however, comes here with a purpose.

The two Youth-With-a-Purpose outfits that showed up here were as different as day and night — as different as Youth and youth. One was the national encampment of 4-H clubs, 183 strong — at least two boys, two girls and a couple of 4-H leaders from every state and territory. All were country or rural town youngsters.

The other outfit was the National Youth Lobby, 449 strong, from only 16 states and mostly big city youngsters.

It's a pity somebody didn't think of getting these two groups together. It might have ended in a riot, but it would have been worth the experiment.

The Youth Lobby was sallow as to complexion, a little on the frowny side but awfully sophisticated, awfully cocky.

Sense and Nonsense
The 4-H youngsters were healthy as all outdoors, clean and neat, a little on the shy side and awfully practical. The boys had raised livestock or done other farm projects. The girls were specialists in home economics.

The 4-H club members came here to listen and learn. They heard talks from cabinet members and other government officials. They saw congressional agricultural committees in action. Then they had discussion groups. If the talks were on the heavy and dull side, the discussions when the kids tore 'em apart were not.

Near the end of their week's program the 39 members of the 4-H group who had reached voting age took the pledge of good citizenship on the steps of the Jefferson Memorial. They'll make good citizens all right, and no doubt about it.

In contrast, the Youth Lobby came down here to tell Congress how to run things, according to their liberal and decidedly left wing notions. Some of the congressmen apparently listened politely. Other congressmen told their youthful constituents to go on back home and quit bothering them. Some shoved the lobbyists off on their secretaries. These youngsters came away bitter and disgusted. What kind of citizens they'll make, gosh only knows.

Both the Republican and Democratic Party organizations have tried to make something out of their young peoples' auxiliaries, without too much success.

Youth Leads Way
The Young Republicans, which has 800,000 members, just held their biennial convention in Milwaukee, with 450 delegates from every state except Louisiana and Mississippi.

The Young Democrats claim only 400,000 members now, but have started a drive to get a million members by September. The Young Democrats will hold their biennial convention later in the summer.

Both the Young Republican and Young Democratic organizations are used to develop party leaders and workers who will get out the vote on election days. Such effort is all to the good. The only trouble is that there isn't enough of it.

In many foreign countries it's the students who take the leadership in political reform movements. That's because they form the one largest element of literate, thinking people. They usually get shot for their trouble, but in the U. S. it isn't necessary to pay that penalty.

All the more reason to get the bobby-sox set interested in politics and off on the right foot. It ill-behoves any old codger to scoff at Youth That Takes Itself Seriously. It was Youth that won the war and Youth that figured out how to make the bomb. It's going to be their world in a few years. What do they want out of it?

Morse Undisturbed by 'Elimination' Reports

WASHINGTON, July 1. — (P) — Senator Wayne Morse said yesterday he had "no comment" on reports that he had been marked for "elimination" because of his battle against the Taft-Hartley labor bill.

He told questioning reporters that he refused to argue with attacks which show "a complete misunderstanding of the issues."

All election officials must expect criticism if they display an ounce of honest independence," he declared.

A reporter asked Morse "about the charge that you have ignored the wishes of the citizens of Oregon."

"My first (campaign) pledge was to maintain my independent judgment without yielding to pressure," Morse replied.

Fish Lake Yields Body Of Drowned Angler

The body of Alvin William Anderson, Klamath Falls, drowned June 16 in Fish Lake, was found Saturday by his three sisters, Mrs. Ella Lewis, Mrs. Ella Cole and Mrs. Pearl Wadsworth, Coeur d'Alene, Idaho. Anderson drowned when the boat from which he was fishing overturned.

Accompanying the sisters on their mission were Anderson's parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Anderson, Coeur d'Alene; his widow

Mrs. Donna Shotwell, Roseburg; Elaine Wickers, Portland, and Donna Wickers, Klamath Falls.
