country from the wicked Republicans who if given the chance will botch up the whole tax business.

The Republicans will point out how happy we might have been with our lower taxes and our greater "take home money" if the Democrats hadn't viciously kicked over the tax reduction apple cart.

SUCH is two-party government—which, after all, is the best form of government yet devised. The two parties battle it out in a free and open forum, and the voters listen and decide.

Under one-party government (which is spreading rapidly in the world) somebody ISSUES AN EDICT and gets a blank check.

THIS writer believes we ought to have had tax reduction NOW, if we could have got it. Since we can't have it now, we ought to get it as soon as we can.

Reckless government spending is our greatest danger. If permitted to go on unchecked, it will fritter away our resources at the very time when we need them worst. Frittering away our resources by reckless spending will leave us weak at the very time when we need (perhaps worse than we have ever needed it before) to be strong.

Reckless spending will continue as long as there is plenty of money to spend. Human nature just works that way. As long as the sack of OTHER PEOPLE'S MONEY remains full, we'll go on dipping into it.

WE are thus assured of one good old familiar domestic issue. Our politicians have fought, bled and died over taxes since the time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary.

California dispatches report the state in Fresno Friday of a "grass roots" campaign whose avowed aim is the winning of the 1948 Democratic Presidential nomination for Henry Wallace.

Wallace is a sincere chap. His supporters, generally speaking, are "left wingers." Left wingers, also generally speaking, are Communists, Communist sympathizers, and head-in-the-rosy-clouds Communist admirers.

COMMUNISM heads up in and takes its orders from MOSCOW. So, you see, we'll have a NEW issue next year.

IN England, Foreign Secretary Bevin, in an extemporaneous address to a coal miners picnic, says "there is no danger of another war in this generation so far as I can see."

But he adds: "I feel conscious that a wrong decision, a wrong judgment, or a petulant word NOW might condemn the children of 30 or 40 years later."

WE can still remember another British foreign minister who came back from Munich and told his people (with us listening in) that "we have assured peace for this generation."

A few weeks later the armies were marching and the guns were roaring.

WE were weak then, but were able to shelter ourselves behind the wall of Britain's might while we grew strong. The next time we'll have to bear the brunt of whatever may follow "wrong decisions, wrong judgments and petulant words at the wrong time."

Whatever else we do, we'd better stay strong.

STREAM POLLUTION

By CHARLES V. STANTON

The East Oregonian, Pendleton, is urging a speed-up of the anti-river pollution program, insisting that the State of Oregon should aid municipalities in sewage disposal by paying half the cost.

While unable to agree with the East Oregonian's insistence that all high dams proposed in that area are absolutely essential, we believe it obvious there is little excuse, other than the financial cost involved, in permitting stream pollution to continue its destructive effects.

Roseburg can be very proud of its record of being the smallest city in Oregon to install a sewage disposal plant. This, of course, was at the time the plant was constructed.

Commenting on the river pollution situation and its plan for state aid, the East Oregonian says:

The best way to have effective state action to prevent pollution would be for the state government to help pay for the work. At present the entire cost of a sewage disposal plant falls upon a municipality.

There is an incentive for delay and evasion because city officials can save money and worry by doing nothing. Nor do their constituents suffer because the damage inflicted is to fish life or to those living down stream.

Whether the salmon run has been depleted by the building of dams or by pollution is a moot question but the dams must be built because they give us atomic power and other factors dealing with national safety.

It is possible that pollution is the more serious problem and may have been underestimated. This is something that can be corrected and should be looked after. It is a state affair as well as a local problem and the state should help meet the cost.

Should the state participate financially in anti-pollution installations, general clean-up of our streams could be advanced by many years. Oregon cities already have accumulated a total of $17 million in sinking funds earmarked for sewage disposal.

The East Oregonian adds to its argument:

We will get faster action with reference to eliminating stream pollution if the state does its part. Why should the state be exempt? It collects license revenue from sportsmen and from the commercial fisherman. The municipalities do not. The state gets revenue from the tourist business and good fishing streams are a tourist lure.

Sen. Cain Replies To Attack on His Housing Program

WASHINGTON, July 22.—(AP)—Senator Cain (R-Wash.) yesterday described his housing bill as "the first serious and practical effort to do something about the veterans' housing problem."

In a three-page statement replying to what he called "an inspired attack" on the legislation, Cain listed these objectives of the bill:

- 1. To provide a home for a veteran at a price which he can afford to pay.
2. To transfer responsibility for the disposal and liquidation of war housing to a permanent, experienced federal agency from a war-born, temporary agency whose record of performance is foolishly extravagant.
3. To recognize the virtue of home ownership for those who can afford to buy their homes.
4. To acknowledge and satisfy a debt (the $2,000,000,000 cost) owed to the federal government.

Under the legislation, Cain said, the veteran would have first opportunity to buy a permanent, war-constructed house at a reasonable figure. He suggested a price of $4,000.

The second objective, he said, would be to terminate the federal public housing authority and transfer its power and authority to the Federal Works Agency.

Says Western Europe Can Solve Own Problems

SALEM, Ore., July 21.—(AP)—State Corporation Commissioner Maurice Hudson, who returned last week from an air trip to Europe, said today that Western Europe will solve its problems, despite some Communist and Fascist sentiment that prevails.

Hudson said Prime Minister Ramadier enabled him to attend a session of the national assembly, where Hudson was impressed by the presence of women and colonial representatives under the new constitution.

In Italy, Hudson said several businessmen told him they would like to see the return of Mussolini, whom they said at least provided a strong administration.

Hudson said some French businessmen told him they would like to establish outlets for their products in Oregon.

Sen. Cordon Raps Stockman for Cut in Bonneville Fund

WASHINGTON, July 21.—(AP)—One Oregon Republican blames another for failure of the Bonneville power administration to get a bigger appropriation.

Senator Cordon (R-Ore.) led off with an accusation, in a statement to reporters, that the "adamant opposition of Congressman Stockman (R-Ore.," blocked increases in Bonneville appropriations.

Cordon expressed himself as "bitterly disappointed" in the Bonneville budget adopted Saturday by the House-Senate conference.

The conferees allowed Bonneville $8,596,400 cash and authority to write contracts for an additional $4,935,500. The House had voted $6,907,000 cash and no authorization; the Senate $18,222,400 cash and $6,000,000 authorization.

"My office," said Cordon, "worked nights over a period of many weeks and a mathematical justification was presented for every dollar of the $22,000,000 appropriation recommended by the Senate."

He said he signed the conference report because there was "nothing else to do," adding: "Every other item in the Interior Department appropriation bill was agreed upon. Its enactment was long past due.

Stockman Blames Cordon

Replying to Senator Cordon, Stockman told reporters: "In my opinion, the responsibility for omission of funds for the Eugene-Eugene and Detroit-Eugene transmission lines (two of several denied appropriations) rests squarely on the shoulders of Guy Cordon, because he was offered the House conferees figures of $13,500,000 for the agency, plus $2,500,000 for substations, which could have included these two Oregon lines.

The Senate committee, he said, had approved every item of the Bonneville budget. The House wanted to stick to essential features, including "eight or 10" projects under construction. The House conferees, he said, added the Bonneville-Troutdale transmission line and comparable line in Washington which seemed justified for new construction but denied funds to about six new lines.

Selection of any of those lines for construction, he said, would have turned the negotiations into a "political grab bag." He accepted full responsibility for the committee's refusal to add $500,000 for administrative expense, but said he was supported by some of the House conferees.

Wanted Raver's Scalp

Stockman, during the House hearing on the Interior budget, wrote Interior Secretary Krug, demanding the resignation of Dr. Paul Raver, BPA administrator, on the ground that he would not furnish the committee with basic figures on which to establish appropriations.

He said the House conferees decided they could justify just so much money on the project and his work on the committee was confined to an effort to help determine where that money could be best spent.

Cordon predicted a supplemental appropriation will be asked for Bonneville. Stockman said he already had proposed that possibility to Cordon but understood Cordon is opposed to the suggestion.

An aide to Cordon said the senator is considering asking the Senate Appropriations Committee to send an investigator to Oregon to gather information about Bonneville. Stockman said he believes this may be a good idea. He suggested the investigation study anything that could be classed as "political activity."
