porter.

It's an old dodge in democratic countries.

ATTLEE is a fair, decent man who has a hard time making up his mind. As a result of this characteristic, he is apt to let things drift. In London, they're telling this apocryphal story to illustrate the way his mind works:

One of his ministers said to him one day: "Look here, sir, I've just put strychnine in your wife's coffee." Attlee (so the story goes) murmured: "Quite, quite," and went on to some other detail of his work.

NAIVE people in this country jump to the conclusion that if Attlee goes out Churchill will come in. There isn't a chance of that. Socialism hasn't run its course in Britain. The scars left by feudalism are still too deep; class dislikes still too strong.

When a British worker touches his cap to the boss, he doesn't like it. He still wants a system where such things aren't done. He looks to socialism to provide the system.

IF Attlee goes out, Foreign Minister Bevin will probably come in. Bevin is blunt and forceful. He makes up his mind quickly. When he takes aim, he pulls the trigger.

In this country, our eyes are fixed on Russia. Momentarily weak though she may be, Britain is still our most potent ally in the impending struggle between communism and freedom of the individual. So our first interest in any new head of the British government lies in how he may be expected to handle himself toward Moscow.

If you've followed the dull but highly significant story of the Council of Foreign Ministers, at its various meetings, you must have noted that Bevin has stood up firmly to Molotov and often has told him off effectively.

TURNING back to the all-absorbing story of Russia, and what she is going to do, and what we are going to do about what she does, Averell Harriman, our secretary of commerce, continues in Portland his revealing statements about communism and its objectives and where they may lead.

He says, among other things:

"RUSSIA'S OFFICIAL VIEW IS THAT COMMUNISM CAN'T SURVIVE IN A CAPITALISTIC WORLD."

THAT won't impress you much unless you stop to think—which we so seldom do. But when Harriman's statement is analyzed it hits you with a jolt.

Here is what it means:

IF it is Russia's official view that communism can't survive in a capitalistic world, it follows that Moscow's next thought will be:

"SMASH the capitalistic world, so that communist Russia will be SAFE."

WHEN you fear something greatly, your first impulse is to SMASH it before it SMASHES YOU.

That primitive impulse makes communist Russia dangerous.

Ellsworth Equipping Home With Office

Congressman Harris Ellsworth reported today he is remodeling quarters at his home, 1318 Riverside Drive, Laurelwood, to provide office space.

The congressman and Mrs. Ellsworth, together with their two daughters, have reoccupied their home.

Their daughter, Mary Margaret, spent the past year in Washington as a secretary in the office of Congressman Hooven of Iowa.

Miss Jane, a student at University of Oregon, will return to Eugene at the opening of the fall semester to enter her senior year.

EDUCATED DOLLARS

By CHARLES V. STANTON

We listened Wednesday to a representative of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce who presented highly technical statistics on the relationship between education and business.

He prefaced his exposition with the statement that mere possession of resources does not produce prosperity. Various South American countries, he explained, are rich in resources and have exceptional climatic conditions, yet their level of prosperity is far below that of Sweden, Denmark and other European countries poor in resources and having rigorous climates, but highly literate.

There is, he said, a definite relationship between education and prosperity. Economic standards may be improved by upgrading education.

His argument was capably expounded by showing educational levels in the various states in comparison with per capita income, living standards and retail sales. It was interesting to note that economic standards corresponded closely to educational factors.

Western states, comprising an area with the highest proportion of high school and college graduates, rank far above the southeastern section, in which money expended for education is lowest in the nation, and where the smallest percentage of people have had formal schooling.

Oregon, according to the speaker's charts, stands well toward the top of the list in all except the per capita expenditures for education. The state also had the nation's best record in army tests in which men were screened for mental and educational deficiencies, the extremely low rate of rejection being unsurpassed by any other state.

While many factors could be brought into the argument other than a pure comparison between education and high level economic standards, nevertheless it is quite evident, we believe, that the higher our degree of literacy, the better our qualifications to promote prosperity and higher standards of living.

But more interesting than the actual argument presented was the fact that business — big business — is throwing its weight into the fight against illiteracy and is promoting higher levels of education.

Big business is interested only in making more profit dollars. It often takes a roundabout course to obtain its profits. It is often cruel, domineering and ruthless. But it sees only one thing, the Almighty Dollar, and to achieve that dollar it will engage in such activity as may be shown most effective.

Its studies have convinced its hard-headed representatives that by encouraging more people to complete high school and college courses, retail sales can be boosted. Educated people command higher wages. The relationship between income and education progresses along parallel lines. People who have the least education compose the bulk of the low income group, while those with college education dominate the upper income brackets.

As people with higher incomes have more money to spend for manufactured goods, educational upgrading is reflected in improved retail sales. Retail trade is the chief goal of big business. Consequently big business is not entirely unselfish or altruistic in its motives when it employes high-powered men to "sell" education to the nation. The goal is the big, round profit dollar.

But, at the same time, everyone benefits from the success of this program through a general lift in the level of social and economic welfare. So it is a good idea and deserving of all possible help.

Bonus Plan Among DAV's Demands

LAS VEGAS, Nev., Aug. 22.—(AP)—New York City was chosen yesterday by the 26th national convention of the Disabled American Veterans as the site for their convention next year.

The organization approved a resolution recommending to Congress a bonus plan that would provide compensation of $3 per day spent in service; $4 per day for overseas service; $5 for overseas service and disability, and $6 for survivors of deceased veterans.

Another resolution approved recommended social security credits for all veterans who were not eligible for such credits while in service. Construction of a huge national war memorial building in Washington, D. C., for use of all veterans' organizations, was asked.

Other resolutions sought income tax exemptions for all disabled veterans earning less than $2,400 a year and the establishment of a new veterans' claims court in Washington as a last court of appeal from Veterans Administration decisions on benefit claims.

Wampum, the shell-money of North American Indians, was of two colors: dark purple and white.
