INFLATION. More inflation can lead to ruin—as in China.

Price control would work, in any time other than war, we ought to restore it. The condition we face is serious. It is more serious than any similar condition we have ever faced.

It was difficult enough to bring up production fast enough to swamp rising prices even when we were concerned only with ourselves. Now that we have to produce for a large part of the rest of the world, along with ourselves, it is immensely MORE difficult.

BUT we have no good reason to believe that price control by law in time of peace will work. It isn't working in Britain, whose situation is far more alarming than ours. The British have retained their wartime controls over prices, and in addition have added some new ones.

But they aren't getting the production they need. And the British people are more docile than our people. They obey laws more readily than we. They could get away with it where we can't. But they aren't getting away with it. Their experience certainly doesn't tempt us to try it.

AT any rate, the talk of price control that is beginning to be heard does bring home to us the seriousness of the situation we face. Maybe it will help to convince us that these are really days for hard work and saving.

THERE is a little tale from St. Louis that shows how the scarcity system works. The St. Louis Cardinals and the league-leading Brooklyn Dodgers have an exciting three-game series coming up. There aren't tickets enough to go around. So speculators are said to be asking as high as $50 for a pair of reserved seats whose box office price is $3.50.

THE city of St. Louis or the state of Missouri could forbid such gouging by law. But if that were done, people who were willing to pay $50 for a pair of seats would meet people who were willing to SELL them at that price out in a dark alley somewhere and the transaction would be consummated, law or no law.

We've seen that happen over and over in America. We'll continue to see it whenever buyers are more numerous than sellers and money (whatever its real value) is reasonably plentiful.

That's why price control in time of peace doesn't work.

Russell Malcolm, Former Roseburg Resident, Dies. Russell Abe Malcolm, 43 resident of Oakridge and an employee of the Southern Pacific Railroad, died Sept. 10 in the S. P. Hospital in San Francisco. He was born Jan. 9, 1904, in Holden, Mo. He was a former resident of Roseburg, living here for 11 years before moving to Oakridge in 1942.

Surviving are his wife, Molly V., and a son, Donn, both of Oakridge, and two sisters, Mrs. Alice Clayton, Umpqua, and Mrs. Mary Bergfeld, Grants Pass.

Funeral services will be held in the chapel of the Roseburg Funeral Home Sunday, Sept. 14, at 2 P.M. Interment will be in Civil Death Cemetery.

Reduction of Logging Fatalities Board's Aim

County Commissioner L. V. Beckley and W. J. Adair of the Roseburg Lumber Co. attended the log safety conference conducted at Salem Thursday and Friday by the Accident Prevention Division of the State Industrial Accident Commission.

The commission is now working on a long-range program aimed at the reduction of log loading, unloading and hauling of logs by

OFF FOR THE COAST

By CHARLES V. STANTON

We've never quite been able to figure out why we do these things. We suppose if there wasn't something a little "peculiar" in most of us there would be no need for psychiatrists. But along about this time of the year, when the leaves begin to turn, and the fog clings to the lowlands in early morning, and a smell of rain is in the air, we feel the compulsion to go salmon fishing.

We recall, many years ago, that we caught a legal limit of salmon—once. Before and since we've fished, and fished, and fished, usually with nothing to show for our efforts except a few scrap fish, perhaps a small jack salmon, and occasionally—very occasionally—a single silverside or chinook salmon as a reward for a week or more of exhausting "sport."

But here we go again. We'll spend next week along the Oregon coast cramped for hours on end in a small boat, inhaling outboard motor fumes, while we lug assorted hardware through miles of saltwater. And while we alternately roast or freeze, or become soaked if it rains, and our eyes become blurred from constant reflections on the water, and we suffer from wind and sunburn, we'll love every minute of it—fish or no fish.

Nor will we be alone in our daffiness. We'll probably have trouble maneuvering our boat through traffic at some of the spots we'll fish during our week's vacation.

Each year we try to spend at least one week enjoying a fall salmon fishing trip. We usually make headquarters at Newport, where we are joined by a brother who resides at Toledo. The party will include our father, a retired railroad engineer, who makes his home in Roseburg, and upon whom "threescore years and ten" sit very lightly. Dad taught his two sons to fish as soon as they were old enough to hold a willow pole, and although his sons have local reputations as "experts," dad can still give them lessons in catching fish even though he may not throw quite as "nice" a fly as either of his two "boys." However, it's dad's hook that gets the most fish. We still have hopes we'll beat him someday.

So, with dad and our brother, we'll prow around Yaquina bay and probably drop in at Alsea and Siletz bays in the hope of picking up a few salmon.

There is a distinction between "hope" and "expectancy," although the two words are often used synonymously. We hope to catch fish but we expect we'll have about the same kind of luck we've had for the last four or five years. Fish will be striking both before and after our visit but not while we're there.

We have been informed there is a huge run of salmon off our bays waiting for that mystic something that starts them up freshwater streams to the spawning beds. Salmon have been congregating for weeks. They remain just outside the bays in great schools, where they are preyed upon by commercial trawlers who needlessly kill thousands of young immature fish. Soon, we hope, something will be done to force trawlers away from those schools.

But adult salmon, while waiting for the final urge of the migration instinct, that will send them like sheep surging up their parent streams, often travel with the tides in and out of the larger bays to feed upon small fish. It is during this period that our bays furnish wonderful sport, if you are one of those nuts willing to tolerate all sorts of discomfort to find reward in shaking perch, bullheads, and scrap fish off your hook, while hoping that a salmon may take a notion to strike. Occasionally you hit the jackpot and from then on you're a hopeless addict. It's worse than dope. You'll go back year after year hoping against hope to be lucky just once more.

We've got our fingers crossed!

trucks. The lumber industry of the state is charged with 25 per cent of the $105,000 accident claims filed with the commission during the past 30 months, but represents only 12 per cent of the total man work hours.

The severity of log truck driver accidents was one fatality to every 49 accident claims filed during this period.

Airport Traffic Continues Average In Fall Business

Traffic at Roseburg Airport has thus far shown no signs of a fall slack as the past two weeks' transients and local flights continued the summer time average. A total of 143 itinerant planes used the port during the month of August.

Mr. and Mrs. Ted Inley flew their BT-13 to Los Angeles to visit friends Aug. 30, returning here Sept. 1. Jack Fincham left Sept. 1 in his AT-6 on an extensive plane trip for Los Angeles, Phoenix, Albuquerque, San Antonio, Oklahoma City and Chicago. He is employed here as manager of Interstate Tractor Co.

Mr. and Mrs. Leo Howard McMinville, flew to Roseburg last Saturday, bringing their three children to a visit with their maternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. George Lawson, the couple and Mr. and Mrs. Eldon Howard then left by plane for Bremerton, Wash., to visit relatives.

Gordon Watson, Seattle, arrived here last Wednesday in a Cessna owned by the Sound Flying Service for a visit with his aunt, Mrs. Mamie Pickens.

Ray C. Brown, physical education instructor at Junior High School, arrived here August 30 from Globe, Ariz., in a BT-13 piloted by George Jones. Brown holds a private pilot's certificate. A group of Crescent City business men flew to Roseburg Sunday in a four-place Howard to enjoy golfing at the Country Club. They were Pilot Ted Lee, Frank Roll, Bill Spear and "Shorky" Copperhead.

First Beech Bonanza aircraft of this vicinity was flown here yesterday by R. B. Meyer, operator of Tye Lumber Co., from the factory at Wichita, Kans.

H. M. Lewis, Copco employee of Medford, arrived here yesterday on business in his Luscombe.

Herbert Thomsen, owner of Thomsen Timber Co., Chehalis, Wash., and his wife, stopped in Roseburg last week to visit friends who are on their way to Reno, Nev., in his new Navion, piloted by Chuck Sutherland.

Mr. and Mrs. Harrison R. Winston left Tuesday for Portland with Pilot George Felt in a Stinson Reliance.

Vets' Dependents Told of Social Security Benefits

In view of the frequency of deaths of World War II veterans reported in the daily press, the Oregon Department of Veterans' Affairs today reminded surviving widows and dependent parents of social security benefits they may receive by virtue of the deceased's time spent in active service.

Amendments to the social security act of Aug. 10, 1936, provide that "any veteran of World War II who dies within three years after his discharge is automatically fully insured under the old age and survivors insurance program."

He received at least 90 days between Sept. 16, 1940, and the formal termination of the war (July 25, 1947), and his discharge was not under dishonorable conditions.

2. Or he served in that same period for less than 90 days and was discharged for a service injury, aggravated disability or injury.

"The effect of this amendment is to assure monthly income payments to the widow with minor children, or the dependent parents, of any World War II veteran who is discharged without honor and who dies within three years after his discharge," James E. Peebles, Portland field office manager for the Social Security Administration, told Veterans' Affairs officials. But he cautioned that widows without minor children are entitled to a lump-sum payment only, unless they are 65 or more years of age.

This act applies even though the deceased veteran may never have worked in employment covered by the social security act, Peebles declared.

He pointed out, however, that where death was due to service incurred disability, the Veterans' Administration's compensation or pension payments to the beneficiary will rule out application of the social security benefits.

"But a point to be remembered," he advised, "is that although the survivors may be receiving VA pension or compensation, they may be eligible for social security benefits also, if the veteran had an insured status earned in the ordinary manner."

Survivors were advised to contact either their county veterans' service officers, the Department of Veterans' Affairs at Salem or Portland, or to get in touch directly with the Social Security Administration field office for this area, located at the Eugene Postoffice building.

Weekend of Events On Drain Schedule

DRAIN - This city will be a busy place this weekend, with the North Douglas County Fair scheduled for today and Saturday, and the gathering of the Applegate clan on Sunday.

Members of the Applegate family will start gathering at 10 o'clock Sunday morning and will have a basket dinner at Noon at the Drain community center.

At 2 o'clock will occur the dedication of the new Jesse Applegate monument at the old family centery at Yoncalla. This will be followed by the dedication of the Applegate trail markers at Drain at 3:30.

The Oregon Journal helicopter will fly to Drain Sunday, bringing as its passengers a speaker for the dedication ceremonies and a photographer.

In the event of inclement weather, all programs will take place in the Drain Community Hall.

The North Douglas County Fair, to be held in the community hall, is a post-war revival of fairs traditionally held at Drain. Agricultural products from communities in North Douglas County will be displayed.

Douglas Property, Climate Attract

Trend in real estate is completely turning to persons of Midwest and Eastern states, who are coming to this section to build homes and farm, according to the Strout Realty office.

One party, the agency reports, has notified the local office that he is now organizing a colony of persons who will come to Douglas County for farming, while a telephone call was received yesterday from a party in Illinois who said he plans to sell out his business and arrive here next week.

According to a national bulletin distributed by the agency, Douglas County seems to be in high favor of the many sites being investigated by eastern persons, with many people sending in inquiries specifying information concerning this country.

This has been brought about greatly, the agency believes, by people who have heard of Oregon's climate from ex-servicemen and through publicity pamphlets, and a desire to get away from hte coming winter in the East.

Purchase of S. W. Turpin's 100-acre farm east of Yoncalla was made this week by Kermit and Charles Miller, formerly of San Leandro, Calif., the Strout Agency reported.
