Truman Asks Individual Tax Slash of $40

Offset Increased Levy On Corporations Suggested; No Chance, GOP Reply

In his state of the union message to Congress Wednesday, President Truman called for an across the board tax cut of $40 for every taxpayer plus an additional cut of $40 for every dependent. To compensate for the loss of revenue, Mr. Truman asked for an increase in the taxes on corporations, which, he declared, are well able to afford it.

Just a year ago, on the same occasion, the president told Congress: "No tax cuts in 1947. Yes, I referred to the Marshall plan as a decisive contribution to world peace. Mr. Truman made a special point of emphasizing his administration's plan to achieve peace. Three times he repeated the phrase: "This leads to peace—not war."

And then there were these additional proposals from the President: An extension and strengthening of rent controls which are scheduled to die entirely after February. An increase in the minimum wage from 40 to 75 cents an hour. Bigger and better social security benefit coverage. A national health program financed by compulsory insurance. Legislation to protect the civil rights of every individual. And as part of that program, statehood should be granted to Hawaii and Alaska.

What does the Congress think of the President's message? Well, if applause is any criterion, there is this to go on: Mr. Truman spoke steadily for 25 minutes before he was interrupted by any handclapping.

"Politically-hostile" is the way the dispatches described the President's Congressional audience. That is, the Republicans generally were hostile, although the Democrats, by and large, praised the Truman message. The word most used by the Republicans in commenting on the speech was that it reeked of 1948 Presidential campaign politics.

Only the Democrats in the audience applauded his tax proposals. And it appears from the immediate reaction of the Republican leaders, that Mr. Truman's discussion merely was academic. They said quickly and bluntly: "There isn't a chance that the President's tax bill will be passed. Cheap politics, they sneered at Mr. Truman's plan. Republican Representative Harold Knutson, who has his own bill to cut five and-a-half billion dollars in income taxes from the top to bottom, said he would go ahead with his own bill. Knutson is in a good position to do that—he is chairman of the House Ways and Means committee, the committee which introduces tax legislation.

Most of what the President asked for yesterday restated what he had asked before. He again called on Congress to pass the 10-point anti-inflation program he submitted to the recent special session. "We must," he asserted, "deal effectively at once with the high cost of living." As you know, the bulk of this program, which includes stand-

Press Comment Sees Politics In Truman Message

(By the Associated Press) President Truman's state of the Union message to Congress drew sharply varying reactions from the nation's press today.

Comment ranged from the Omaha (Neb.) World Herald's critical reception terming the message a "bland, undisguised plea for votes next November," to that of the New York Times which said the speech, in its broad setting, "is hopeful, high-sounding and essentially on the right track."

The Times in a separate editorial, however, took critical note of the president's tax plan, asserting that legislation aimed at its passage "might in all accuracy and fairness be described as 'the voters' bonus bill of 1948.'"

St. Louis Globe Democrat—"Now that the third party gives haven to Reds and radicals, the president feels free to grapple to his bosom most of the New Deal theories with new ardor and widen the cleavage between the GOP and his own party, at least for the campaign's duration."

Kansas City Star—"Mr. Truman felt the compulsion to make a bid for the left-wing vote that had sustained the Roosevelt administration and was being endangered by the appeal of Henry Wallace. But in so doing, he overplayed his hand and has held out promises that in no wise could be fulfilled."

Coquille's record, with three losses and no wins so far this season, does not seem quite as impressive as Roseburg's, with one win and two very close losses.
