

Infantile Paralysis Patient, Minus Use of Hands, Paints Pictures With Brush in Teeth

Cheery despite being a bedfast infantile paralysis patient, Miss Aileen Lattin demonstrates how she turns the pages of a book with a long tube held in her mouth. Mrs. Helen R. Gustafson, special nurse, stands by. In the muscle reeducation treatment for her limbs, Miss Lattin receives hot packs, which are changed several times daily. Del McKay, city chairman of the March of Dimes, pays a call on Miss Lattin to admire her paintings, which may be seen on the walls of her room at the Roseburg Sanitarium.

Although she has lost the use of her hands during an 11-year siege of infantile paralysis, Miss Aileen Lattin, patient at the Roseburg Sanitarium, is an accomplished artist who has painted more than 100 pictures during the past four years.

Miss Lattin, who specializes in oils, uses long brushes which she grips between her teeth. Likewise, she writes with pen or pencil, or turns the pages of a book as it rests on a bedside easel.

It was Miss Lattin's uncle who first interested her in painting. Four years ago he came to visit her at her home, which was then at Empire, Ore. Asking what she could get for her, she replied, "Oh, some paint brushes!"

She then set out to paint with water colors. During the Christmas season she designed 200 Christmas cards. Then a friend introduced her to oils with which she has painted more than 100 pictures.

Some of her paintings decorate the walls of her room at the sanitarium. They include Dutch windmills, a large moose standing in the wilds, and various forms of still life which are a composite of many pictures which she has studied.

Miss Lattin's paintings have appeared in several exhibits, including the recent Roseburg Woman's Club art and crafts show. Picture Aids Dimes March

In Coos Bay one year, during the March of Dimes, her painting of a clipper ship sold for $350, the money being turned over to the drive. Before she painted the picture, Miss Lattin studied pictures and read descriptions of
