In the Day's News

Anyway, it's a fairly safe rule that when the big shots at the top begin to use fancy words trouble is in store for the wistful LITTLE people at the bottom of the heap.

* * *

UP in Washington, the legislature has a committee on un-American activities. It is meeting in Seattle this week and is putting the bee on alleged communists. Those upon whom the bee is placed are howling like wounded wolves about invasion of their constitutional rights.

Again this insignificant writer finds himself confused.

He has little use for those who go around with brass bands witch-hunting for communists and telling people in effect to "behold what a good American I AM."

On the other hand, he has no respect for fuzzy-minded pinks who stand on their "constitutional" rights and refuse for publication to say whether they are communists or not.

If communism is worth a tinker's dam as a movement for the establishment and preservation of fundamental human rights, its followers ought to be PROUD of their affiliation with it.

* * *

FROM Washington comes this optimistic word:

"Republican members of the house ways and means committee said today that taxes can be cut $6,300,000,000 (six billion, 300 million dollars) and the government can still pay $11,000,000,000 (11 billion dollars) on the national debt in the next two years."

* * *

IT sounds good—wonderfully good. If we could cut taxes and begin to pay off our debt at a substantial rate, we could get prices down to something like reason.

But before throwing your hat so high it may be carried off by the wind, remember that this is the BEGINNING of a campaign year.

* * *

UP in St. Helens (Oregon), they have a butcher war. It started when a new meat shop cut the price of hamburger as a device to get new customers started through the door and the existing shops met the new enterpriser's price and went him one better.

The ruckus has now reached the point where one establishment is giving away big slices of ham and paying the customer ten cents to carry it home.

* * *

ABSURD?

Certainly!

But it does point out for us what competition can do when it gets going. If you'h stop long enough to think, you'll probably come to the conclusion that free competition, even when it does occasionally go to silly lengths, is better for the general run of us than monopoly, either by private interests or by the STATE.

LETTERS to the Editor

Assault Seen on Moral, Spiritual Principles

OAKLAND, Ore.—Relative to your Monday's "In the Day's News" column, my first reaction was one of shouting "Communist," but on second thought I realized such a charge would not only be untrue, but destroy the prestige of my conviction. A true Communist would be too intelligent and practiced to take such an open stand when he has so little difficulty infiltrating the thinking of pseudo-liberals of mediocre literacy whom chance has given a hearing. I resent with all my soul the present assault on all that is both moral and spiritual (and the two, for all practical purposes, cannot be separated). Our nation was built primarily on moral and spiritual realities, and our present trend is more destructive to our democracy than any foreign military invention could be.

Incidentally you are doing the church, whose spiritual program was built by the labors of Mr. Barrett and others like him, a great disservice with your libelous account, which, personally, I believe to be a lie, perhaps unwittingly, so then heresay. May I add that if the writer of this scandalous reflection on God's plan of regeneration really heard Mr. Barrett preach, apparently the self conviction then received lingers on.

I was also impressed with Roseburg's comparative interest in things sensual, instructing and spiritual as indicated in "Levity Fact Rant." Prohibition of sin is the first consideration in God's plan for man's happiness. However, irrespective of all ethical and spiritual values, I cannot see why business men (even only men in business) cannot see the economic waste in the liquor business. Roseburg and suburbs spend better than a million dollars annually for booze. This to a major extent goes to Milwaukee, St. Louis, etc., as can well be noticed when you compare the filthy, dilapidated fronts of the dives on Cass and Jackson with the general face lifting of legitimate places of business these streets are experiencing.

HERMAN R. LARSON.

"DON'T FENCE ME IN"

By CHARLES V. STANTON

What is to become of the person who hates to be crowded? Where are we, who enjoy the "wide open spaces," to go when migration to the West Coast fills our communities with people?

Great numbers of Pacific Coast residents have been reared where they had room to stretch and wave their arms. It has been possible to get out a few miles into virgin country where the voice could be raised in the shout or song without being arrested for drunkenness and disorderly conduct.

But times are changing. Our small cities, villages and hamlets are expanding. Our big cities are getting bigger. Our agricultural lands are being cut into smaller and smaller tracts, to be farmed intensively.

Oregon has not yet felt the pressure as much as have our neighboring states to the north and the south, but migration records show that Oregon is second only to California in new population since the 1940 census and that our increase exceeds 30 per cent.

We still have room to absorb hundreds of thousands of people, and we can be certain that the people are coming, for Oregon's scarcity of population will be altered by people moving out of more populous centers of Washington and California if by no others.

We have been interested in recent months in the large number of persons moving into our own community because cities or localities where they previously resided became too crowded. This has been particularly true of newcomers from California.

The reason we now mention the fact is that we received an interesting visit recently from a couple planning to move into the Roseburg area in the near future.

Perhaps our interest was increased by the fact that this couple has long been on the News-Review subscription list, and that they read this column—a fact they demonstrated by quoting our comment on numerous items pertaining to local conditions and activities. They have been studying Roseburg and the Umpqua Basin for a long time, have become convinced they want to make their future home here, have acquired property and soon will become permanent residents.

This couple is but one of thousands planning to move to Oregon from California. They tell of many personal friends who are making similar studies of Oregon as they contemplate changing place of residence.

This prospective migration of Californians, particularly Native Sons, has as primary cause the rapid industrialization of many areas, the huge influx of new population, and, particularly, the great numbers of foreign born and colored people emigrating to California and its large cities.

The true, native Westerner wants plenty of room. He dislikes being cramped in living space. He wants elbow room.

The Westerner thinks nothing of tossing an overnight case into his jalopy and striking off cross-country for a 500-mile visit with "neighbors," whereas some of our Eastern cousins must pack the family trunk and plan for weeks before travelling what Westerners consider only a hop-skip-and-jump.

Californians frankly admit that the Golden State "ain't what she used to be." The Chambers of Commerce that added many new superlatives to our language, as they tried to extoll the virtues of California sunshine, are now busy disclaiming authorship of the word "smog."

Where once it was possible to amble peacefully along wide, tree-lined boulevards on a Sunday afternoon's drive in almost any of California's large cities, the congestion of traffic, and antics of "hot rod" and "squirrelly" drivers today makes motoring anything but a pleasure.

Being one of those persons who loves the Great Outdoors, while craving ample living space, we envision the time when Oregon, too, will begin to feel the cramp of population. In fact, we've even heard some of our Roseburg folk grumbling in their beards about "too doggone many people." But our Californians tell us we "ain't seen nuthin' yet," and we know, from obvious trends, that they are correct.

We had Burns in mind as a possible place where we could find the wide open spaces and round out our declining years if Roseburg became too big for comfort, but now that Burns has "made" the Saturday Evening Post we imagine it will be an emigration target and will soon be filled with "furrin' nesters."

It won't be long, we fear, until we'll hear a good, healthy "yippee-ki-yi" only from a juke box.
