

Disease Control To Be Discussed At Livestock Meet

The present condition and outlook for animal disease control, with a special report on the threat of foot-and-mouth disease from Mexico, will form the basis of several program features at the eleventh annual meeting of the Western Oregon Livestock Association in Roseburg February 13 and 14. Speakers in this field will include Dr. Charles F. Haynes, veterinarian; P. M. Brandt and J. N. Shaw of Oregon State College.

Activities of the convention will start at 9:30 Friday morning with the address of President Albert Julian, Lyons, according to the program just distributed by H. A. Lindgren, secretary and O. S. C. extension specialist. Others scheduled to speak are James Coon, Western Wool Storage Co.; G. H. Hansen, Fish and Wildlife Service, Portland; and R. L. Clark, president of the Pacific Wool Growers Cooperative.

Committee meetings will start Friday afternoon, leading to the adoption of a program for the activities of the county associations in the coming year. Committee chairmen are, general resolutions, E. A. McDonald, Yoncalla; disease control, R. L. Jones, Clifton; legislative, Albert Powers, Coos Bay; transportation and marketing, Gene McKenzie, Coos Bay; predatory animal control, Jack Swanson, Lebanon, and range and pasture improvement, Hubert Willoughby, Harrisburg. The annual banquet will be in the Umpqua hotel Friday night with Burton Hutton, farm program director of radio KALE, Portland, as toastmaster, and Wallace Kaddery, farm program director of KGW, Portland, as speaker. Kaddery will report on livestock and forage conditions in Australia and New Zealand as observed on his trip to those countries last year.

Saturday's program will include completion of committee work, presentation of committee reports and election of officers. Delegates from 12 western Oregon county livestock associations are expected to attend, and all interested are welcome.

Skunk Loses Fight With Two Men

GEARHART, ORE.—(AP)—Mayonnaise jars, a clam shovel, milk bottles, flower pots and a bow and arrow were used here in the nocturnal slaying of a belligerent skunk.

"We did it in self defense," said Robert Wiley after he and Harrison Greenough, a neighbor, retired triumphantly from the battle.

Wiley's dog lost a back-yard skirmish with the skunk and was being pursued toward the house when his master appeared on the porch. Wiley flung the weapon nearest at hand, a clam shovel, and scored a direct hit at long range.

Angered, the skunk cornered dog and master while Wiley pitched jars, bottles, pots and his pocket knife with frantic and faulty aim.

Greenough responded to calls for help with his bow and arrows. One broad-tipped shaft ended the siege.

Greek legend supposed that the horns of the goat that suckled the god Zeus were the horns of plenty.
