Almost anyone can make alterations in clothing. And judging from the shape of a pair of pants I took in a few weeks ago, "anyone" certainly had been trying. This pair of pants had been made six inches smaller in the back but were still too large for the man. The work had been done in Eugene. He almost had to walk behind himself to get his hands in the side pockets, which is a darned good trick if you can do it. I ripped the pants all apart and took out the side pockets. Then I drafted a paper pattern to fit the man, and re-cut the pants entirely. When finished they fitted perfectly and he was well pleased. Yes anyone can make alterations — but —
