

Air Force Takes Limit Off Number Of Enlistments

Enlistments in the Air Force, which have been limited to 50 a month for the entire Oregon district Army and Air Force recruiting service, have been opened to all young men who can qualify, according to T/Sgt. Woodrow W. Halstead of the Roseburg office.

Sgt. Halstead's announcement followed news from Washington that the Air Force had decided on a recruiting drive for 25,000 men. It opened approximately 300 enlistment opportunities to prospective Air Force members in this district.

The Air Force has been holding its strength to 312,000 men, enlisting only a limited quota each month of about enough to offset the normal attrition due to expiration of enlistments.

Because of its variety of educational and training benefits, the Air Force is a popular branch of the service and quotas have been easily filled, with waiting lists often necessary.

Enlistment is open to veterans and young men without prior service. Sgt. Halstead said recruiting will probably go back to the limited quota basis when the new year raising overall Air Force strength to 337,000 is reached.
