big free shows, and when big names are concerned everybody in Washington who has nothing else to do tries to get in.

The dispatches report that the audience was "quiet and intent." Everybody listened carefully. There were no disturbances. Those present gave no sign, the correspondents say, of either sympathy or hostility.

Obviously, they wanted to know what makes this man Wallace tick. They were trying to find out by listening to him talk—which, after all, is the best way. This writer has a notion that it is the way everybody feels about it at the present moment. If Wallace has anything worth while to offer, we'd like to hear it.

HIS main point (leaving out the bitterness he displayed toward President Truman) was this:

Our leaders should meet as soon as possible with Premier Stalin to get an "overall agreement" that will halt an arms race between Russia and the United States.

IS that a good idea?

Well, under ordinary circumstances, it would be. When people have disagreements, the thing to do is to get together and iron them out, if possible. In that way, bad trouble is often avoided. But the present circumstances aren't ordinary. Our leaders have met with Stalin, over and over. Always, from these meetings, Stalin seems to have come away with more and our leaders with less.

Russia seems to know where she is going, and intends to get there, if possible. Anyway, that appears to be the lesson of past meetings.

DID you ever try to put through a business transaction with somebody who held all the high cards? If so, you probably didn't get a very good deal out of it. To arrive at a truly fair agreement, both sides should be even in power. Otherwise, the agreement finally reached is pretty apt to be one-sided.

THIS insignificant writer's notion of it is that before we try to make another deal with Stalin we'd better get stronger.

Always, of course, we should be fair and decent to Russia as we go along. Fairness and decency to an opponent, along with reasonable caution and horse sense and unwillingness to take wooden money, never weakened ANYBODY'S position.

WHAT we must remember is that we aren't playing this game for fun. It's FOR KEEPS. All our marbles are at stake. We can't afford to guess wrong.

MORE ON POST OFFICES

By CHARLES V. STANTON

Patriotism running high in 1898 was responsible for the name given the Sampson post office, Mrs. H. E. Walker reports in a letter to the Port Umpqua Courier, Reedsport. The Reedsport newspaper has joined the News-Review in an effort to secure information on early-day Douglas County post offices to aid Lewis A. McArthur, Oregon historian, in compiling data concerning all of the past and present post offices in the state.

The Sampson post office was established in 1898 by George B. Balderee, who named it for Rear Admiral William T. Sampson, whose exploits as a naval officer in the Spanish-American war were occupying newspaper headlines.

Mr. and Mrs. Walker took over the station in 1910 on a personal bond and continued it for three years. It was located on the present right of way of the Southern Pacific railroad near the Coos County line and on the Walker farm. It was the center of several active logging operations and did a large money order business.

Among mail carriers who served the office were Roy Peterson, Mike and John Hawkins, and Messrs. Coleman and Roberts. Mrs. Walker does not recall the first names of the latter carriers.

Following removal of the logging camps and the scheduled construction of the railroad, the office was closed in 1913, which pleased the Walkers, as they had many business obligations and found the postal work too confining.

Ruby post office also was in the western part of the county, being situated originally on Perkins Creek, a tributary of Lake Tahkenitch, according to a report by Mrs. Mary A. Slonecher, who operated the station from 1898, when it was moved to Five Mile Creek, another tributary of the lake, until it was discontinued in 1901.

It was first established in 1895 and was operated originally by Joseph E. Wilson. The first carrier was George Gentry who carried the mail on foot from Maple Creek in Lane County, then crossed the lake by boat to the Old Gardiner Landing, and from that point continued on foot into Gardiner.

Mrs. Slonecher and Mrs. Wallace Smiley are authorities for information on the name selected. It seems that Wilson had a 12-year-old daughter, Myrtle, who particularly liked the name "Ruby" and persuaded her father to give the name to his postal station.

Mrs. L. J. Sedy, a resident of Lakeside, writes that Willard post office was located at what is now the Southern Pacific station known as Ivy and located about five miles north of Lakeside. The office operated during the early 1920's while the Strout Lumber Co. maintained a logging show there. The railroad station, which was a mile south at that time, was known as Willard, so the post office was given the same name.

Mr. McArthur writes that the request for information has resulted in a direct message concerning the Weekly post office, which was located on the Roseburg-Coos Bay wagon road, about 20 miles west of Roseburg, and doubtless named for the Weekly family, prominent in Coos County.

The Weekly post office was established in 1883 but lasted only a few years. It was succeeded by the Reston post office in 1890. E. E. Weekly was the first postmaster at Reston.

Mr. McArthur also raises a question as to the origin of the name "Nonpareil" as it applies to the community east of Sutherlin. There was a Nonpareil post office, and the quicksilver mine still bears the title. Mr. McArthur would like to know how the community received its name.

reg will not exhibit the child publicly nor solicit by the public visits to her home. She recently had put an advertisement in a newspaper setting visiting hours.

Mrs. Kolberg was free, Judge Adrien Cote said, to give endorsements in connection with the unusual walking ability of the child.

James H. Innes

A. L. Lasswell

A. L. Lasswell, active in Douglas County financial circles for 25 years, retires this week as manager of the United States National Bank's recently established Yoncalla branch.

E. C. Sammons, president of the Portland bank, announced that James H. Innes, assistant manager of the St. Helens branch is taking over the Yoncalla managership.

Lasswell, president of the Farmers Security Bank in Yoncalla for several years, continued as manager after the bank became a branch of the U. S. National Bank. He joined the bank in 1926. Three years later, he accepted a position with a banking firm in Plains, Mont.

Innes, the newly appointed manager, was born and schooled in Canada. He began his financial career in British Columbia in 1926. Three years later, moving to the United States, he accepted a position with a banking firm in Plains, Mont.

Innes remained in Montana for 12 years, taking an active part in the Montana Bankers Association. He served in the war with the Marine Corps. Following the war, he joined the staff of the U. S. National, being transferred in March, 1947 to the G. L. Loan department at St. Helens, becoming assistant manager there eight months later.

Lasswell, the retiring manager, has long been active in civic affairs and in the promotion of Northern Douglas County as a natural area for industrial development.

Adventists Launch Annual Drive For Missions, Welfare

Last week, Seventh-Day Adventists launched their annual in-gathering drive for mission and welfare work, with a rally marking the 40th anniversary of the plan which has contributed more than $42 million to mission projects around the world.

The local congregation plans to reach its $3,000 goal this year in a three-week solicitation campaign, according to Pastor J. J. Robertson.

The Seventh-Day Adventists' relief organization reports shipment of more than 1,000 tons of clothing overseas and $21 million expended for food for the starving in Europe and the Orient.

In addition, the church's rehabilitation fund has made possible the rebuilding of three hospitals, a publishing house, a college, an academy and scores of churches in China; eight mission launches in the South Seas; a hospital and printing plant in the Philippines; a hospital in Burma; and scores of other projects completed since the war.

Many new institutions—such as hospitals in India, China, Jamaica, Mexico, Bagdad, Brazil and schools in Lebanon, Peru, Nigeria and the Congo—are a part of the mission expanding program. Keeping pace with this expansion, the Adventist mission board sent out 902 missionaries—more than half of them new recruits—in the two years following V-E day.

In announcing the church's 1948 foreign mission budget of nearly $10 million, W. E. Nelson, general treasurer, of Washington, D. C., urged members to "give as frugally as possible in order to give still stronger support to the church's program of carrying the gospel to all the world."
