In the Day's News

their action was made just ahead of President Truman's March 17 address in which he asked Congress for rearmament, including a temporary draft and universal military training.

In his address, the President told Congress this country intends to back up free nations of Europe in their struggle to MAINTAIN their freedom against Communist Russia.

The pattern already set is being followed out.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says the Western European Union "now SEEMS SURE of strong American military support."

Two programs are under consideration in Washington:

- 1. ARM THEM only—that is to say, supply them with guns, ammunition, planes, tanks, etc., and (presumably) let them supply the men. (We kidded ourselves with that same idea back in 1940. We know where it led.)

If you want to bet, you'd better lay your money that we'll start out with No. 1 and end up with No. 2.

CHINA emerges from its recent blackout in the news.

"I confess seven of the government's best divisions were destroyed in Manchuria. They were my best armies that under my command accomplished the revolutionary campaigns with glory."

They are brave words. But words never yet stopped equipped and disciplined armies.

Let's not kid ourselves that they will now. Without help, the Chinese Communist armies will overwhelm weak and inflation-ridden Nationalist China.

AT the beginning of World War I and again at the beginning of World War II, we spent far too much time kidding ourselves.

Let's not repeat that mistake. The game we are playing now is for keeps, and all our marbles are in it.

Statue of F. D. Roosevelt Unveiled in London

LONDON, April 13.—(AP)—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt fugged a red, white and blue busting from a bronze statue yesterday and unveiled Britain's memorial to her husband, who died three years ago.

King George was the central figure among thousands who watched. The former first lady's pull on a silver cord revealed a 10-foot statue showing the late president standing bare-headed with his cloak thrown back.

Hundred's of Britain's great and thousands of her humble greet a reverent silence.

SERVING PUBLIC INTEREST

By CHARLES V. STANTON

C. C. Crow, editor of Crow's Pacific Coast Lumber Digest, in a sizzling editorial blast leveled in the current copy of his trade publication at cooperative sustained yield forest management, contends that sustained yield operation constitutes monopoly and will injure communities now thriving from the expansion of the timber industry.

Perhaps these claims are correct. At least the people who honestly believe such to be the case have every right to state their case.

On the other hand, there are others who believe the claims of monopoly, loss of initiative and free enterprise, and danger to prosperity to be completely baseless.

Opponents to sustained yield are making their major appeal on a foundation of prejudice and sentiment. They point to the plight of "small" operators who will be put out of business; to the denial of the right of a free American citizen to enter the industry of his choice on the time-tried shoestring; to the danger of placing the whole timber industry in the hands of the "few big" operators.

The sustained yield program would include only about 25 per cent of the timber held by the U. S. Forest Service. This 25 per cent is composed chiefly of small tracts of timber intermingled with privately owned forests.

We believe anyone will admit that the rights of the public transcend those of the individual. Timber involved in the sustained yield program is owned by the public.

The controversy has many angles, but essentially it boils down to an objection to granting selected operations a 100-year contract to cut publicly owned timber and excluding others who might need raw materials to keep their operations alive.

Referring back to the axiom that the public interest comes first, it is apparent that, if cooperative contracts are to be granted they should go to the operators best able to give fullest possible utilization.

Whether they will be reimposed will depend upon mountain snow and water conditions, said emergency power director Robert P. O'Brien.

A power brownout was imposed more than a month ago because of an unprecedented winter drought and depletion of mountain hydro-electric water supplies.

The monopoly charge fails completely when examined carefully. In the first place, not more than one-half the publicly-owned timber would go under cooperator contracts.

But the people as a whole are more interested in jobs and payrolls. Will sustained yield, through cooperator contracts, damage communities?

Everyone familiar with the industry knows the tremendous waste occurring today. A look at any sawmill's refuse burner is sufficient proof.

Let's not kid ourselves that they will now. Without help, the Chinese Communist armies will overwhelm weak and inflation-ridden Nationalist China.

Let's not repeat that mistake. The game we are playing now is for keeps, and all our marbles are in it.
