is because they themselves will it so.

If you will recall that sharp contrast — balancing those grim days when Britain's military power was smashed, when France had fallen, when Hitler's victorious armies stood across the channel, only a few miles away, with the present time, you will be inclined to agree that the British have something to celebrate.

IN Hollywood, there is a blinge of a different sort. Lana Turner and Bob Topping are getting married. It ought to be a fairly professional spectacle. Each has been married three times before. There should be no false moves anywhere along the line. At every point, both should know exactly what to do next.

THROUGHOUT the story, dollars are mentioned casually in thousands. Bob got loose on Friday from his third wife. He handed her $100,000 in alimony. After the wedding and the reception, Lana donned her $25,000 trousseau and prepared to leave on a New York-London honeymoon with the first stop at Palm Springs.

One correspondent says: "The festive board groaned 'neath the weight of lobsters flown from Boston and assorted delicacies flown from New York and Louisiana."

WHO are they? Well, Bob is the playboy descendant of a tough and competent ancestor who learned how to put tin permanently onto steel, thus making our tin-can civilization possible. Lana is a former Hollywood high school girl who has demonstrated outstanding ability to pack people into theaters.

THESE celebrations in London and Hollywood differ sharply in one respect. The London dispatches tell us that George's and Elizabeth's DOMESTICITY has endeared them to home-loving Britons. Bob and Lana gain an added luster from the fact that this is their fourth wedding.

The British are amused and diverted by royal spectacles. So they pay the price for royalty. As a part of their show, they don't care for divorce. Witness Edward and Wallis. Over here, among our playboy and stage entertainers, the more the merrier.

It all depends, you see, on what the cash customers like.

SECURITY BOND CAMPAIGN

By CHARLES V. STANTON

The people of the United States are being urged to take out insurance. This is a somewhat different insurance than that which ordinarily would come to mind at mention of the word. It is insurance against inflation, against depression and against future personal financial hardship.

The drive was planned midway in 1947. At that time several compelling reasons were foremost in the minds of federal economists. Organized labor was preparing to drive for spring wage increases, which would add another round in the spiral of inflation.

Economists saw the need to reduce inflationary circulation of money. When people have too much money to spend and to use in speculation they are not careful with expenditures. Rapid circulation of money keeps prices on a constantly advancing plane, and, when coupled with increasing wages and salaries, may result in uncontrolled inflation.

The economists wanted taxes kept high, but, this being a political year, Congress voted a tax decrease over strenuous objections from the administration's financial experts. The millions saved by income tax reductions will proportionately increase national spending power, thus contributing to inflation.

The government succeeded in tightening bank credits and restricting speculative loans. This was done by increasing the amount of money banks are required to hold in reserve. Thus the banks had less money to loan. But the effort to stop another round of wage increases met only partial success. Wages have been advanced in many lines and more wage demands are pending.

Two programs have been put in operation to drain off surplus money. One is the Marshall plan, which takes billions of dollars for European recovery—money which probably will come back in the form of industrial and business benefits at some future date—and another is the increase in expenditures for military defense. But, despite these levies on national wealth, there still is too much money in the hands of the public to suit the economists.

Naturally, most people resent the scheming of the federal government to sit as judge, jury and executioner on the family pocketbook. Yet it must be freely admitted that the danger of inflation remains acute. The anticipated recession and possible depression failed to materialize. There is no sign of other than increasing prosperity. Inflation could cause untold suffering. Actually it could be worse than any depression we have known.

We may object to the government taking our money from us by taxation and wasteful expenditures, but we can find no grounds upon which to raise objection to urgings to save our surplus earnings and profits—to practice thrift on a voluntary basis.

A great many people have not stopped buying bonds. Last year, for example, people in Oregon bought $60,625,923 of Series E bonds, or $5 million more than the amount of bonds turned in for redemption.

It is the purpose of the federal government to get its obligations out of the hands of bankers. The banks can use federal bonds as a basis for credit. Credit is inflationary. If the debt can be taken from banks and spread out among the people, the national economy is far more stable.

That is why this new bond issue is insurance. Purchase of the new Series E bonds drains off excess purchasing power, lowers the volume of inflationary credit, sets current profits and salary surpluses aside for use at some future date when, perhaps, they will be needed more than today. Instead of confiscating wealth, as is done through taxation, the federal government encourages retention of wealth in the hands of the people, but retards circulation. Circulation, not possession, of money is the cause of inflation. Our last depression was not caused by a lack of money but resulted only because people quit circulating money.

Thus the new issue of Series E bonds will be known as "Security" bonds, because they make our national economy more secure and give the possessor protection against both inflation and depression—protection from depression because whenever the circulation of money gets too low, and times become hard, bonds can be redeemed and money restored to circulation.

So, regardless of what may be our opinions regarding other financial manipulations, we should lend every encouragement to the Security Bond campaign and give it fullest cooperation and participation.

National Guard Unit in Tri-City Area Proposed

Proposed establishment of a National Guard rifle company in the Tri-City area will be explained by Lt. Col. Robert Irving of Roseburg, at a meeting of the Canyonville Chamber of Commerce May 10.

Col. Irving, commander of the 1st Battalion of the 186th Infantry, said one more company is to be organized in Southern Oregon to bring the regiment to full strength. The meeting at Canyonville will be in the nature of a "feeler" to learn what interest Riddle, Canyonville, and Myrtle Creek will take in the National Guard, he added.

In addition to Col. Irving, Col. Briggs, Regular Army inspector of the 1st Battalion, will be present at the Canyonville meeting. The National Guard company in Roseburg is a heavy weapons unit of the 186th Infantry. Letter designation of the company here is "B." Letter designation of the company yet to be organized would be "C." Col. Irving said.

The 186th Infantry Regiment is part of the 41st Division. This division established a combat record in the South Pacific during the recent war, taking part in three "spearhead" recoveries of islands or airfields.

The first spearhead took place at Hollandia, in Dutch New Guinea; the second on the island of Biak, and the third in the Philippines.

In addition to a unit which would be used in both war and peacetime protection, approximately $40,000 in National Guard pay would be brought into the Tri-City area if the new company is located there, it was pointed out.

Logging, Wartime Experience Told To Toastmasters

Autobiographical sketches were the topics of the speakers at the weekly Toastmasters Club meeting Tuesday night. R. L. McCoy and Jim Price each gave talks, but an additional extemporaneous speech was given at the club's request by Harrison Winston on his wartime flight experience.

McCoy who is with the state industrial accident commission, told of his early life and experiences as a logger during the years of "tramp" loggers, skid roads and "employment sharks." Most loggers, he said, jumped around from place to place and were known as "tramps." In reference to employment "sharks," he told how many logging operations were said to have three crews: one working, one coming and one going. Men were hired by the "sharks" for a fee, and fired in turn by the employers, who received a cut on the fee. He contrasted logging methods then and today. McCoy served in the Marines from 1942 to 1944, and has since worked with the accident commission.

Price sketched briefly his early childhood, schooling and employment, and his experience as an amphibious engineer in Europe during the war. He came to Roseburg in 1947. Winston gave a graphic account of some of his flight experiences during the war in the Pacific and held the club's attention with accounts of his dangerous missions. His first mission (he completed 31 in all), he said, was from Mindora in the Philippines over a target on Formosa. The Air corps was assigned to wipe out these bases prior to the invasion of Okinawa. He admitted he was "scared" half to death when he learned his first mission was over so dangerous a target that rescue would have been almost impossible if he had crashed. He explained the flight formation and flying principles, in which his duty over the target was merely to maintain the speed

Federal Tract Lease Transferred To Scouts Council

Transfer of a lease to 80 acres of federal public land on Wolf Creek, near Little River, to the Oregon Trail Council, Inc., Boy Scouts of America, for use as a summer camp received final approval in Washington, D. C., today, it was announced by Assistant Secretary of the Interior C. Girard Davidson.

The camp, used for 21 years by the Boy Scouts, is the only camp of its kind in the United States established by special act of Congress. Details of the lease transfer negotiations, handled by the Bureau of Land Management in the Department of the Interior, have served to emphasize "a unique feature of the national program for cooperation between government and the public in promoting the maximum beneficial use of the federal public lands," Secretary Davidson pointed out. The story, briefly, is as follows: Used by Various Groups

In January 1927, Congress passed a law authorizing and directing the secretary of the Interior to lease the lands to the Douglas County Boy Scout Council as a summer camp for the Boy Scouts of Douglas County. Under the law the lease would be effective for 50 years and the Scouts were required to report to the Department of the Interior each year as to the use made of the land.

These requirements were faithfully met and during the course of the past 21 years the Scout Council's reports told of the use of the land by Girl Scouts, Camp Fire Girls, 4-H Club members, and other youth groups as well as their own. Incidentally, the reports explained that shortage of gasoline curtailed the use of the camp during the war years.

In April, 1944, the Douglas County Boy Scout Council was consolidated with the Lane County Council and other Scout organizations to form the Oregon Trail Council, Inc., with headquarters in Eugene.

Shortly thereafter, the Oregon Trail Council petitioned the Department for transfer of the lease privileges and responsibilities from the original Douglas County Council. Approval of the transfer was certified after formal notice of the Oregon County Council's incorporation and other legal

Freight Rates Boost Goes in Effect May 6

WASHINGTON, April 28—(AP)—The increase in railroad freight rates averaging about 5 per cent, will go into effect May 6.

The increase was authorized by the Interstate Commerce Commission a week ago. The carriers have completed the filing of revised rate schedules to carry out the changes.

These are also being posted at freight depots throughout the country, fulfilling the ICC requirement of ten days notice to the public prior to collection of the higher charges.

Domestic water carriers are authorized to revise their rates in proportion.
