Cutthroat Trout Eggs Slated at Rock Creek

Chinook salmon run indicate few fish caught to date, with approximately 60 hours fishing effort per fish, or approximately double the time required last year.

Continued cold weather and water temperatures have served to delay the seasons from normal schedule, Newcomb said.

range. Construction is expected to start in the near future.

Charles Lockwood, state game department supervisor, reported that studies of water temperatures indicated it would be inadvisable to move the trout hatchery from Rock Creek to Winchester as proposed by the club, which offered a free site for a fish hatchery. The club officers expressed opinions that the Rock Creek water supply is inadequate and will become less suitable for hatchery purposes as logging operations continue and that water temperature comparisons had not been carefully made. Further presentation of the matter will be made to the commission.

The club also adopted a resolution urging the Game Commission to use its efforts to secure a higher water scale for hatchery and department field workers.

Long-Bell Buys Mills

At Gardiner, Reedsport

year. One is at Reedsport, located at the head of the Umpqua estuary on the central Oregon coast about 35 miles north of Coos Bay, and is known as the Bridge mill. The other, located three miles north on the Coast Highway in the town of Gardiner, is known as the Gardiner mill. About 200 persons are employed in the two mills.

On Sustained Yield Plan

Backing up the Gardiner mills, White announced, are 75,000 acres of company-owned timberlands, about 92 per cent of which is Douglas fir. Interspersed with the company's holdings is a large unestimated quantity of federally owned timber. These tracts are adjacent and southwest of Long-Bell's Vaughn properties.

The timber supply is such White's statement said, that the mills can be operated on a sustained yield basis. Trunk logging will be used exclusively.

The headquarters for the Gardiner logging operations are in the town of Scottsburg, 18 miles up the Umpqua River from Reedsport. Here the company maintains a cook house, bunk houses, offices and maintenance shops as well as a family camp of 35 modern five room houses. Logs are rafted from Scottsburg to Reedsport and Gardiner.

Executives Designated

About 60 per cent of the total production of the mills in 1947 was shipped by water in coastwise freighters which tie up at the Gardiner mill's dock and the city of Reedsport dock. The balance of the production is moved over the Coos Bay branch of the Southern Pacific Railroad.

"Two personnel changes are anticipated," White said. J. H. Keneson, general manager of the Longview division, will be in general charge of the newly acquired properties in addition to the Longview operation, and J. M. Adams, formerly superintendent of Long-Bell's Quitman operation and more recently manufacturing foreman and head grader at the Longview mill, will be superintendent of both the mills. M. O. Kelley, until recently assistant chief clerk of the Longview division, will go to Gardiner as chief clerk.

Robert R. Van Orden has been named logging superintendent and Wayne Froman will head the logging department office staff. Both men are being transferred from Rydewood, where they held similar positions.

Railway Strike Called By Three Union Groups

decided today to make a new attempt to head off the threatened railroad strike May 11.

It scheduled a meeting in Chicago Thursday with the railroads and disputing unions in an effort to mediate the wage controversy. Board Chairman Frank Douglass told a news conference all other procedures under the Railway Labor Act have been exhausted.

"This is the last thing we can do as a board," Douglass added. Douglass said that so far as he has been able to determine, the board no longer has authority to take over the transportation system, because the War Powers Act ended a year ago.
